Andrew Kaufman and David Wilkins have joined forces to bring out this new edition. Much has happened in the dozen years since the last edition was published. The profession has changed greatly, bringing new problems for the profession and new developments with respect to long-standing issues of professional responsibility. These are discussed in the Introduction that precedes Chapter One. The purpose of this preface is only to explain a few matters of form and to express a few words of thanks.

Omission of textual material in excerpted cases, articles, books, or other works is always indicated by ellipses. Footnotes, references to case records, and portions of citations, however, have been omitted freely in cases and in other written material without notation. We have also corrected without notation a variety of minor typographical errors in the quoted materials.

We are grateful to the many authors and publishers who gave us permission to reprint copyrighted material. They are acknowledged in the following pages. Prefaces to earlier editions have recognized the contribution of many friends and colleagues to this work. A number of people, chiefly David Herwitz, Dan Coquillette, Detlev Vagts, and James Vorenberg, used earlier versions of this edition and made many useful comments. Our research assistants, Matthew Bobys, Trevor Farrow, Dan Markel, Darrell Miller, and David Shelton were invaluable in their assistance. For many years, Melinda Eakin has prepared and read and reread version after version of this edition for student use, providing an endless number of fabulous editorial services in preparing this manuscript for publication. In the last year, she was joined in this effort by Kathy Curley. We are more than grateful for the skill and good cheer with which these unsung heroes performed all the major and minor tasks.
