

PATHWAYS OF POLICE MISCONDUCT

---

Problem Behavior Patterns and Trajectories from Two Cohorts

Christopher J. Harris
UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS LOWELL

CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS
Durham, North Carolina

Copyright © 2010
Christopher J. Harris
All Rights Reserved

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication Data

Harris, Christopher J.

Pathways of police misconduct : problem behavior patterns and trajectories from two cohorts / Christopher J. Harris.

p. cm.

Includes bibliographical references and index.

ISBN 978-1-59460-632-8 (alk. paper)

1. Police misconduct. 2. Police--Complaints against. I. Title.

HV7936.C56H37 2009

364.1'32--dc22

2009028661

CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS
700 Kent Street
Durham, North Carolina 27701
Telephone (919) 489-7486
Fax (919) 493-5668
www.cap-press.com

Printed in the United States of America

For my wife, Kathy

Contents

Acknowledgments	xii
Chapter 1 • How Criminology Can Contribute to Understanding Police Misconduct	3
The Criminal Career Paradigm	7
Controversy over the Criminal Career Paradigm	8
Life-Course Theory and Developmental Criminology	13
The Risk Factor Prevention Paradigm	16
Enhancing Our Understanding of Police Misconduct	18
Theoretical Lessons	18
Methodological Lessons	22
Conclusion	27
Chapter 2 • Towards a Developmental View of Police Misconduct	29
Defining Police Misconduct	31
How Experience Shapes Misconduct	35
The Experience-Misconduct Curve	49
Possible Trajectories of Police Misconduct	50
The Advantages of Using a Developmental Framework	57
Conclusion	68
Chapter 3 • The Early Intervention System Project	71
Research Questions and Related Objectives	71
Data Collection	73
Cohorts	74
Attrition	76

---

Variables	79
Indicators of Misconduct	79
Personnel Complaints	79
Citizen Complaints	80
Internal Complaints	83
Independent Variables	83
Correlates of Misconduct	84
Use of Force	84
Civil Litigation	85
Secondary Arrests	85
Control Variables	87
Sick Leave	87
Assignment	88
Productivity	89
Analyses	90
Conclusion	90
Chapter 4 • The Experience-Misconduct Curves	95
Misconduct Career Elements	103
Conclusion	113
Chapter 5 • Trajectories of Citizen Complaints	115
Trajectory Analyses Using the Semiparametric, Group-Based Approach	116
Trajectories of Citizen Complaints for the Late 1980s Cohort	118
Profiles of Citizen Complaints for the Late 1980s Cohort	125
Correlates of Citizen Complaint Trajectories for the Late 1980s Cohort	130
Trajectories of Citizen Complaints: Early 1990s Cohort	136
Profiles of Citizen Complaint Trajectories: Early 1990s Cohort	140
Correlates of Citizen Complaint Trajectories for the Early 1990s Cohort	142
Comparison of Citizen Complaint Patterns	144
Conclusion	145

---

Chapter 6 • Trajectories of Internal Complaints	151
Trajectories of Internal Complaints for the Late 1980s Cohort	152
Profiles of Internal Complaint Trajectories for the Late 1980s Cohort	156
Comparing Citizen Complaint and Internal Complaint Trajectories for the Late 1980s Cohort	159
Internal Complaint Trajectories: Early 1990s Cohort	160
Conclusion	161
Chapter 7 • Implications for Policy and Priorities             for Research	165
A Brief Review of the Empirical Results	166
Theoretical Implications	170
Policy Implications	171
Research Implications	175
Future Research	179
Conclusion	182
Bibliography	185
Index	195

Acknowledgments

This work was written for two primary reasons. One is that I enjoy research in both policing and in life-course criminology, even though I consider myself a police scholar first and foremost. The second is that I was fortunate enough to work for Rob Worden on his very ambitious and well designed Early Intervention System (EIS) project, as this research is a secondary analysis of his project's data. The combination of both interest and opportunity rather serendipitously lead to the idea for this book. Since no work is truly written alone, there are many I owe thanks.

Research Site. Unfortunately, since this project was done in collaboration with a research site which wishes to remain anonymous, some of the people I would like to thank must also remain so. The head of the police department receives my admiration, since few would allow researchers into an agency to collect data on such sensitive issues as personnel complaints, civil litigation, uses of force, and the like. Such an undertaking does not happen without a progressive leader who is sincerely interested in improving the performance of his agency. I would also like to thank Sergeant Mary for helping us with data collection. Without her aid and skill, the data collection for the EIS project would have taken much longer.

EIS Project Staff. I had the esteemed pleasure of working alongside both Shelagh Catlin-Dorn and Shelley Schlieff, both of whom are wonderful, intelligent people whose company on the project made the work that much more enjoyable. They were supportive of my effort in writing this book, and I owe both much thanks.

Colleagues. I owe Rob Worden a considerable debt, both for his allowing me to work on his project and the support and feedback he gave me in writing this book. David Bayley read and offered feedback and suggestions for this work, as did Terrance Thornberry, Hans Toch, and David McDowall. Jorge Chavez lent me his expertise with Proc Traj, and without it this work would have easily taken several more months. I have also received much support from the Criminal Justice faculty here at UMass Lowell. Thanks to all.

Home. My wife Kathy is my largest pillar of support. She provided encouragement when I despaired, incentive when I waned, and strength when I tired. Thanks would hardly be enough.