Series Editor's Foreword

The Carolina Academic Press African World Series, inaugurated in 2010, offers significant new works in the field of African and Black World studies. The series provides scholarly and educational texts that can serve both as reference works and as readers in college classes.

Studies in the series are anchored in the existing humanistic and the social scientific traditions. Their goal, however, is the identification and elaboration of the strategic place of Africa and its Diaspora in a shifting global world. More specifically, the studies will address gaps and larger needs in the developing scholarship on Africa and the Black World.

The series intends to fill gaps in areas such as African politics, history, law, religion, culture, sociology, literature, philosophy, visual arts, art history, geography, language, health, and social welfare. Given the complex nature of Africa and its Diaspora, and the constantly shifting perspectives prompted by globalization, the series also meets a vital need for scholarship connecting knowledge with events and practices. Reflecting the fact that life in Africa continues to change, especially in the political arena, the series explores issues emanating from racial and ethnic identities, particularly those connected with the ongoing mobilization of ethnic minorities for inclusion and representation.

Acknowledgments

I wish to thank all those whose kind generosity and varied contributions made this study possible; I owe them a lot more than I can probably assess. Dr. Jean Allman, Professor of African History and my advisor, who encouraged me since I joined the graduate program at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, remained a family member throughout the difficult times and exhibited a great deal of zeal and patience for my work. I also thank Charles Stewart, Professor Emeritus of African History, for his insight and preparedness to assist at every stage, and Dr. David Owusu-Ansah, professor of African History at James Madison University, for his encouragement. Dr. Kenneth Cuno and Dr. James Brennan gave useful comments on an earlier version of this work. The Rev. Dr. Patrick J. Ryan, S.J., former Dean of the Faculty of Arts at Ghana's University of Cape Coast and now the Laurence J. McGinley Chair of Religion and Society at Fordham University, tutored me at Cape Coast University and has remained an inspiration and source of encouragement. This research was supported by a fellowship from the International Dissertation Field Research Fellowship Program of the Social Science Research Council with funds provided by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation.

I wish to thank the numerous informants, though duly acknowledged in the footnotes, for accepting me into their homes and for the readiness with which they provided answers to my nagging questions. I am also indebted to the personnel at the Public Records and Archives Administration offices at Tamale and Accra, especially Mr. Mahama Mampru-doo and Bright Pooby, for their preparedness to work at odd hours to get material for me; the personnel at the National Archives at Kew Garden, London; my colleagues at St. Olaf College History Department for the collegiate environment; Sarah Entenmann for her professionalism in copy editing the work; and Dr. Michael Fitzgerald for the insightful comments. I also wish to acknowledge some friends, some of who might be shy to see their form of assistance mentioned: Maurice Amutabi, Richard Djukpen, Isidore and Jane Lobnibe, Ibrahim Mohammed, and Seidu Inusah, and to those friends too shy to see their names in print.

My Mum, Adisah, together with the two persons who started it all, but could not see the end, my father Iddrisu Zakaria and my wife Ruhaina, deserve special mention, for their willing sacrifice and preparedness to share with me the vexations of continued absence over the years. I also owe much to my dearly loved two daughters, Neina and Pagnaa, who came to terms with my constant “coming and going.”

Any errors and omissions in this study are entirely mine.
