ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The legal-writing community is a supportive and collaborative group of dedicated professors whose individual and collective wisdom about teaching is found in all aspects of this book. The co-authors have learned immeasurably from their participation in this community—from attending conference presentations, sharing ideas one-on-one, reading listserv discussions, and reviewing the rich set of resources that the community has generously shared. Indeed, many of the ideas in this book stem from the now-untraceable sources from which we have learned over the years. We are deeply grateful to the community for making us better teachers and inspiring us to write this book.

More specifically, the co-authors thank Stewart J. Schwab, the Allan R. Tessler Dean of Cornell Law School, and Barbara J. Holden-Smith, Vice Dean of Cornell Law School, for their encouragement and support of this book project. We also thank our administrative assistant, Janice Rose, and our research assistant, Rachel Sparks Bradley.
