PREFACE

This book contains a collection of cases, materials, notes, and questions concerning international criminal law. It is designed for use as a teaching tool, not as a reference work, although it does try to provide an overview of most of the topics that fall within the scope of international criminal law. In addition to the occasional citations on specific points that occur throughout, we have included at the end of the book a short list of reference works to serve as a preliminary guide for further reading.

We have tried to keep the book short, as casebooks go, and to make it useable both by teachers who want to emphasize the increasingly important transnational dimension of U.S. criminal law and by those who want to explore the also increasingly important use of criminal sanctions to enforce norms of international law. These two developments are interrelated and it is more and more difficult, in any event, to keep them separate.

The book is divided into four parts. The first part contains a brief introduction to the field of international criminal law, the question of what crimes are international crimes, and a chapter on the general jurisdictional principles, of both national and international law, that govern efforts to extend U.S. criminal law to foreign crimes and foreign criminals. The second part contains materials dealing with the specific application of those principles (especially in the U.S.) in cases involving the Foreign Corrupt Practices Act, antitrust and securities regulation, export controls, computer crimes, narcotics and money laundering, piracy and terrorism, and torture. The third part deals with procedural aspects of trying such cases in the U.S. courts - and sometimes the courts of other countries. It covers the extraterritorial application of the U.S. Constitution, immunities from jurisdiction, mutual assistance in criminal cases, extradition, alternatives to extradition, prisoner transfer treaties, recognition of foreign criminal judgments and foreign laws, and the bearing of international human rights instruments on criminal procedure. The fourth and final part of the book deals with the prosecution of international crimes, including the Nuremberg and Tokyo precedents, the ad hoc tribunals for the former Yugoslavia and for Rwanda, the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court, and the substantive law of the international crimes of aggression, genocide, crimes against humanity, and war crimes.

Our main focus, in the first three parts, is on relatively recent decisions of the United States courts and the effect of contemporary globalization on U.S. criminal law. We have tried, above all, to convey a sense of the "international vi PREFACE flavor" that is developing in federal prosecutions.* As a result of this particular focus, some topics have been slighted that might figure more prominently in a longer, more comprehensive work on international criminal law. Nevertheless, we believe that the fourth part of the book provides the students an in-depth account of that other burgeoning area, the prosecution of grave crimes at the international level. In choosing material in this part, we have been particularly conscious of the value in directing students to international sources of material that are not always obvious to students and faculty in American Law Schools.

Our basic aim, in short, has been to construct a set of teaching materials that will provide students with a grounding in the transnational issues likely to arise in federal criminal cases and also in the law that has been produced as a consequence of international efforts to impose criminal responsibility on the perpetrators of human rights atrocities.

This book tries to provide a picture of the present state of a rapidly expanding and changing field. Events no doubt will quickly overtake much of what we present. We only hope that, in the meanwhile, teachers and students will be persuaded through using this book to regard international criminal law as an exciting field, worthy of their continuing attention as it grows and develops, as it inevitably will, in new directions.

We thank the American Law Institute for permission to reprint sections from the Restatement (Third) of the Foreign Relations Law of the United States, © 1987, The American Law Institute; and other copyright holders including the Virginia Journal of International Law, Jack L. Goldsmith & Eric Posner (quotation on p. 29); the American Society of International Law (excerpt on p. 378-9 from 94 AJIL 535-36 (2000), © The American Society of International Law); the Academy of Political Science (excerpt on pp. 669-70 from the Political Science Quarterly, 1947); and Alfred P. Rubin (quotation on p. 827).

Since the writing of the first edition, Edward Wise passed away. In the first edition he acknowledged the support provided for work on this book by both the Law School and the Humanities Center of Wayne State University. He specifically thanked Dean Joan Mahoney and the Director of the Humanities Center, Professor Walter F. Edwards. He also stated that it would be remiss in not acknowledging the significant influence of Gerhard O. W. Mueller, who first introduced him to the problems of international criminal law, defined in the most comprehensive possible fashion, decades ago.*

PREFACE vii

Ellen S. Podgor expresses appreciation to Stetson University College of Law for their support in the writing of this third edition and to Georgia State University College of Law for their support in the writing of both the first and second edition of this book. She also thanks students of Georgia State University College of Law, University of Georgia School of Law, Stetson University College of Law and the students from the Temple Tel - Aviv and Rome Summer Abroad Programs, as well as students who participated in online classes that used this book. Additionally she thanks Elizabeth Adelman, Rhea Ballard-Thrower, Darby Dickerson, Anne Emanuel, Janice Griffith, Steven Kaminshine, Paul Kurtz, Christine Nwakamma, Molly O'Brien, Dianne M Oeste, Louise Petren, and David Shipley and research assistants Daniel R. Cotta and Christina L. Kimball . To the late-Edward Wise she expresses everlasting thanks for everything he taught this writer during the writing of the first edition of this book and to Roger Clark for his wisdom and humor in the writing of this second and third edition.

Roger Clark appreciates the support of the Rutgers University School of Law, especially Librarians David Batista, Hays Butler and Lucy Cox, as well as the research and technical assistance provided by Keith Chapman, Eric Bonnette, William McLaughlin, Jackie Morfesis, Marshall Kizner and Milosz Pierwola.
