Broadening the Scope of Human Trafficking Research
Contents

Preface to the Second Edition  xv
Acknowledgments  xxiii

Part I • Human Trafficking in Multifaceted Forms  3
  References  6

Chapter One • Towards a Theory of Human Trafficking: An Integrated Framework from Criminology, Migration, and Feminist Literatures
  Sarah Hupp Williamson  7
  Abstract  7
  Introduction  8
  Institutional Anomie Theory  8
  Migration Systems Theory  10
  Critical Global Feminism  12
  A Unified Framework  13
  Application to Human Trafficking  15
  The Case of Cambodia  16
  Implications  18
  Conclusion  19
  References  20

Chapter Two • Human Trafficking in American Prisons: Forced Labor and the Law in the For-Profit Corrections Environment
  Kelli Lyon Johnson, PhD, and Alana Van Gundy, PhD  27
  Abstract  27
  Introduction  28
  The Rise of Labor and Convict Leasing in United States Prisons  30
  The Capitalization of Prison Labor by Private, For-Profit Prisons  32
Chapter Three • Global Inequality and Human Trafficking: The Organ and Tissue Trade
Andrea J. Nichols, PhD

Abstract

Organ and Tissue Trafficking

Types of Organ and Tissue Trafficking
- Organ Trafficking Involving Deception and Fraud
- Organ Trafficking Involving Force or Coercion
- Harvesting and Selling Organs and Tissues from Cadavers
- Organ Trafficking Involving Willing Sellers
- Heightened Vulnerability and Global Stratification

International Legislation

Implications

Conclusion

References

Chapter Four • Forced Labor in the Cocoa Production Industry: Then and Now
Erin C. Heil, PhD

Abstract

Introduction

Child Labor in Côte d’Ivoire and Ghana

Causes of Child Labor
- Poverty
- Labor Intensive Nature of Cocoa Farming
- Cultural Views
- Lack of Educational Structures

Domestic Responses to Forced Child Labor
- Côte d’Ivoire
- Ghana

International Responses to Forced Child Labor
- The Harkin-Engel Protocol
- Corporate Responses

Implications

Conclusion

References
A Conceptual Framework: The Mutual Relationship between the Hospitality Industry and Sex Trafficking

- Crime Pattern Theory (CPT)
  - CPT Application to Hospitality and Sex Trafficking
- Anchor-Point Theory (APT)
  - APT Application to Drug Markets
- Human Trafficking and the Hospitality Industry: Practical Application of CPT and APT
- Future Recommendations for Control and Prevention
- Proactive Approach: Crime Prevention through Environmental Design (CPTED)
- Collaborative Efforts of Criminologists and the Hospitality Industry
- Reactive Approach: Using Technology to Tackle Human Trafficking
- Conclusion
- References
- References of Articles for Case Studies

Chapter Eight • Pickpocketing and Begging as Forms of Trafficking in Persons
Iveta Cherneva

- Abstract
- Introduction
- Pickpocketing and Begging as Human Trafficking: Fitting the International Law Definitions
- The Action
- Coercive/Fraudulent Means
- Purpose of Exploitation
- The Transnational Element
- The Organized Structured Group Element
- Conclusion: Policy Responses
- References

Chapter Nine • Servile/Forced Marriages in the Context of Human Trafficking
Suman Kakar, PhD

- Abstract
- Introduction
- What Is Forced or Servile Marriage?
- Servile/Forced Marriages in the Context of Trafficking
Introduction

Sex Trafficking of American Indian Women and Children 196

Tribal Jurisdiction 198

- Major Crimes Act 198
- General Crimes Act 199
- Public Law 83-280 199
- Tribal Law and Order Act (TLOA) 200

Victim–Offender Relationship 201

Methodology 203

Findings 203

- Offenses and Penalties 204
  - Adult Sex Trafficking Offenses 204
  - Sex Trafficking of a Minor 205
  - Trafficking in Children 206
- Comparison to State and Federal Human Trafficking Penalties 207

Discussion 208

Conclusion 210

References 211

Chapter Twelve • Risk of Sex Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation in LGBTQ+ Relationships: Case Examples and Implications

Lara Gerassi and Abby Howard 215

Abstract 215

Introduction 216

Background 216

- Sex Trafficking of LGBTQ+ People 216
- Current Discourse on Intimate Partner Trafficking 218
- Practice with LGBTQ+ Individuals who are at Risk of Trafficking 220
- Prevention 220
- Identification 220
- Intervention 222
- Faith-Based Services 224

Case Examples 226

- Ayla 227
- Barbara 228
- Shaun 229

Discussion 230

Implications for Practice and Research 230

- Prevention 230
- Identification 231
Chapter Thirteen • Reducing Risk of Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking Among Runaway and Homeless Youth
  Sue Micetic

Abstract
Introduction
Vulnerability of Runaway and Homeless Youth
U.S. Legislation Concerning Runaway and Homeless Youth
Legislative Recommendations and Local Implementations
Concerning How and When to Intervene
Concerning Where to House
Concerning Treatment and Care
Concerning How to Fund
Conclusion
References

Chapter Fourteen • Violence Begets Violence: The Link Between Conflict and Human Trafficking
  April Houston

Abstract
Introduction
Sexual Violence and Trafficking in Conflict Zones
Rape as a Weapon of War
Child Soldiers
Early or Forced Marriage
Refugee/Internally Displaced Persons Camps
Increased Demand for Sexual Services
Sexual Violence and Trafficking in Postconflict Societies
Social/Economic Dynamics
The Peacekeeping Economy
The Impunity Problem
Case Studies: Past Conflicts
Bosnia-Herzegovina
Sierra Leone
Case Studies: Ongoing Conflicts
Democratic Republic of Congo
Burma (Myanmar)
CONTENTS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Page</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Recommendations</td>
<td>277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preventing/Combating Trafficking in Conflict Zones</td>
<td>277</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Preventing/Combating Trafficking in Post-Conflict Countries</td>
<td>278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>278</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>References</td>
<td>279</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chapter Fifteen • Institutional Anomie and Socialist Feminist Theory:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>A Process Analysis of Trafficking in Post-Socialist Countries</td>
<td>287</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarah Hupp Williamson</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abstract</td>
<td>287</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td>288</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Theoretical Framework</td>
<td>289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodology</td>
<td>290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Research Design</td>
<td>290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Case Selection</td>
<td>290</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Data Collection</td>
<td>292</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Country Results</td>
<td>293</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albania</td>
<td>293</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Czech Republic</td>
<td>294</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Moldova</td>
<td>296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russian Federation</td>
<td>297</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ukraine</td>
<td>299</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Discussion</td>
<td>301</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Implications</td>
<td>308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>References</td>
<td>310</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conclusion</td>
<td>315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Contributor Biographical Information</td>
<td>321</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Index</td>
<td>327</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Additional Online Chapters:</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Interviews with Human Traffickers: Perceptions of Sex and Violence</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Emily I. Troshynski and Jennifer K. Blank</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Introduction</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Research on Sex Trafficking</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Method</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Access and Interviews</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
References

Borders and Intersections: The Unique Vulnerabilities of LGBTQ Immigrants to Trafficking

Lynly S. Egyes, Esq.

Abstract

Introduction

Human Trafficking and Vulnerabilities of the LGBTQ Community

Family-Based Trafficking, Violence, and Rejection

Educational Discrimination

Police and Community-Based Violence

Intimate Partner Violence and Trafficking

Lack of Immigration Status and Fear of Deportation

Employment Discrimination and Informal Economies

The Criminalization of Sex Work and Its Impact on

LGBTQ Trafficking Victims

Moving Towards LGBTQ-Inclusive Human Trafficking Victim Services

Child Exploitation for Labor and Sex

Suman Kakar, PhD

Abstract

Introduction

Forced Labor

Child Exploitation for Labor and Other Services—What Is It?

The Nature and Extent of Child Exploitation in India

Causes of Child Labor

Social, Cultural, and Structural Dynamics

Urbanization

Consequences of Child Exploitation

Lack of Legislation and/or Poor Enforcement of Existing Legislation

Conclusion

References
Preface to the Second Edition

Although there is greater awareness of human trafficking both politically and socially, a gap exists in the literature preventing holistic understandings of the different forms of trafficking and victimization. While “human trafficking” is often used as an umbrella term to describe multiple types of human trafficking, generally, the discourse tends to equate human trafficking with sex trafficking or child sex trafficking in its disproportionate focus. As a result, other forms of human trafficking often get lost in this dialogue. Any discussion of labor trafficking is often misconceptualized as human smuggling or discussed as an immigration issue. Servile marriage and organ trafficking similarly get relatively little attention as forms of human trafficking. Conflating all forms of human trafficking without providing nuance is also problematic, as the indicators, effects, and complex contextual dynamics are different, but are ignored and inappropriately homogenized, problematizing identification, legislation, and social responses. Labor trafficking, sex trafficking, organ trafficking, servile marriages, and trafficking involving child soldiering, adoption, and begging and pickpocketing are unquestionably distinct from one another. Further, various forms of human trafficking and exploitation do not always fit neatly into legal definitions. Rather than focusing strictly on a legislative definition of human trafficking, such as that of the Protocol to Prevent Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons of 2000, or the U.S. Trafficking Victims Protection Act of 2000, we focus on definitional issues, debated interpretations of such legislation, and the act of commodifying and exploiting vulnerable populations more broadly. We move beyond the general idea of equating sex trafficking and human trafficking as one, or conflating all forms of human trafficking, and focus on the myriad of forms of human trafficking. Moreover, the role of identity-based oppression is virtually absent from the academic, political, and public discourse examining human trafficking, with perhaps the exception of poverty and the cultural value of women and girls in global context. Populations who experience societal marginalization are at heightened risk of various forms of human trafficking, such as those experiencing
The discussion of human trafficking has evolved as we begin to understand the unique forms and vulnerabilities associated with trafficking incidents, but the literature requires maturation. The discourse needs to move beyond sex trafficking and migrant work, and focus on the various methods and forms of victimization traffickers use to capitalize on the human body. Additionally, we need to pay closer attention to the vulnerable status of individuals both domestically and globally. Any discussion that does not fully address the complexities associated with human trafficking will not only ignore at-risk populations, but will affect the focus of responses to human trafficking, such as legislation, social services, and activism. Broadening the Scope of Human Trafficking Research was developed to add to the existing literature examining human trafficking both within the United States and worldwide. This Second Edition includes four new chapters not available in the previous edition which cover integrated theory of trafficking, labor trafficking in cocoa production, sex trafficking in the hospitality industry and sexual exploitation risk in LGBTQ relationships. Authors of chapters remaining from the first edition have updated their writing to include new data and findings.

Our general thinking in creating this reader was that there are significant limitations to the contemporary discourse, both definitionally and in the way human trafficking is represented in a homogenized way. We emphasize multiple types of human trafficking and exploitation evident worldwide, with a particular emphasis on identity-based vulnerabilities and those otherwise marginalized in the research literature, as well as institutional barriers and facilitators to various forms of trafficking and/or exploitation. By allowing contributors of this volume to express and explain their own definitional analysis of human trafficking and exploitation, we show the varied conceptualizations, perspectives, and language used to examine human trafficking in the contemporary academic and practitioner-based literature. We wanted this reader to be a tool for students, advocates, and practitioners to better understand human trafficking in all of its forms, as well as to provide better understandings of the experiences of vulnerable populations who are less likely to be identified and offered assistance due to societal and institutional marginalization. In the first part of the book, we focus on the various forms human trafficking can take. In Chapter One, Sarah Hupp Williamson bridges disciplinary explanations to create a unifying theoretical framework of human trafficking. This involves integrating theory from criminology, migration, and feminist literatures. Specifically, the theories of institutional anomie, migration systems, and critical global feminism take into consideration how larger neoliberal global economic shifts shape nations’ economic and social contexts and contribute to conditions favorable to human trafficking.

Chapter Two takes a critical look at the American prison system and how the for-profit corrections environment fosters forced labor. Kelli Lyon Johnson and Alana Van Gundy examine prison labor and its convergence with privatized prisons. By legally analyzing the current system of labor within privatized prisons, Johnson and Van Gundy maintain that there currently exists a system of human exploitation for the purpose of financial gain, and this exploitation fits in the realm of forced labor as defined in human trafficking legislation.

Chapter Three examines various forms of organ trafficking. Looking at the individuals who are targeted in the organ trade, Andrea J. Nichols focuses on the relationship between organ trafficking and poverty. Additionally, she critically examines the recipients, brokers, and those who are exploited in the illegal organ trade, clearly demonstrating the global power dynamics that are at play. Nichols concludes her chapter by discussing the attempts to eliminate the illegal organ trade industry, related debates, and how to strengthen and enforce existing responses.

Chapter Four also looks at child labor, but in West African cocoa production. Erin Heil provides a historical overview of the reliance on forced labor in the cocoa production industry. Specifically, she looks at the conditions that foster child labor, including poverty, culture, and the labor intensive nature of cocoa harvesting. She then provides an overview at the attempts to end child labor in West Africa, and the shortcomings of the various protocols and policies. The chapter concludes various implications that can be drawn from the failed attempts to end child labor in the cocoa production industry.

Chapter Five is an examination of child soldiers. Roos Haer provides an overview of the existing literature covering the use of children in armed conflict. Besides discussing issues related to the definition of child soldiering, the chapter discusses how child soldiering relates to the Palermo Protocol on human trafficking. In addition, the reason why children are joining armed groups during conflict and why these groups recruit them are discussed. The chapter ends with a section on the consequences of child soldiering and an overview of some of the most important measures undertaken by states to punish the offenders.

Chapter Six discusses the relationship between child trafficking and intercountry adoption. Specifically, Erin Heil examines the abduction, sale, and trafficking of children via fraudulent adoption schemes. Additionally, the chapter describes the problems associated with rehoming and global surrogacy. Finally, the chapter looks at the current legislation aimed at protecting adopted children, but because of loopholes and misinterpretations, the policies fall short in their protective abilities.

Chapter Seven is an overview of sex trafficking in the hotel/motel industry. Suman Kakar and her colleagues discuss the integral role that the hospitality industry plays in perpetuating sex trafficking. In particular, the chapter explores how the hotel and motel industry may perpetuate trafficking inadvertently, and advertently facilitate trafficking in their venues. Empirical evidence suggests that the hotel and motel industry plays a significant part in facilitating sex trafficking. Sex trafficking takes place on the premises behind closed doors under the auspices of the hospitality industry—where hotels and motels become tacit contributors to trafficking.

Chapter Eight is an examination of pickpocketing and begging as forms of human trafficking. Iveta Cherneva introduces the problems in the legal and policy dimensions related to pickpocketing/begging as human trafficking. The five elements of trafficking in persons under international law are examined against these activities, establishing the parameters and legal boundaries, looking inter alia into familial begging and pickpocketing. A number of policy responses are compared and contrasted, with a discussion of cases of trafficking for begging and pickpocketing including the famous Hamidovic case.

Chapter Nine is an examination of servile/forced marriages as a form of human trafficking. Specifically, Suman Kakar discusses how servile marriages are often a gateway to sex and labor trafficking. Additionally, Kakar discusses the cultural and social dynamics that maintain servile/forced marriages, and how structural factors maintain the practice despite local and international efforts.

In Part Two of the reader, the discussion shifts to cultural, social, and identity-based characteristics that enhance vulnerability to sex trafficking victimization. Cassandra Mary Frances Gonzalez begins this section in Chapter Ten by focusing on the vulnerable status of Black women with regard to sex trafficking. Utilizing the theory of Black Feminist Thought, Gonzalez discusses how Black women have been isolated from being perceived as victims of sex trafficking through historical and stereotypical imagery. Critically examining the assumptions of victim-type, Gonzalez argues that within anti-trafficking efforts, Black women are more likely to be criminalized, and she shows how the criminal justice system reinforces notions of Black criminality.

Chapter Eleven is a legal analysis of tribal codes and how historical jurisdiction has heightened the vulnerable status of American Indian women and children with regard to sex trafficking. Erin Heil examines the existing tribal codes that address sex trafficking, and recognizes that these codes have relatively no power due to the jurisdictional status that has been put in place by the federal government and various state governments. Heil critically argues that because of overlapping jurisdictions and lack of tribal authority, American Indian women and children are virtually unprotected from sex traffickers.

Chapter Twelve is an examination of sex trafficking in the LGBTQ+ community. Lara Gerassi and Abby Howard critically analyze extant evidence regarding sex trafficking of LGBTQ+ individuals, including intimate partner sex trafficking. They provide three case examples to illustrate such dynamics. The case studies are drawn from two sources: 1) Gerassi’s research study in which two cisgender lesbian women described dynamics of commercial sexual exploitation facilitated or encouraged by a same-sex intimate partner, and 2) Howard’s practice experiences as a clinical social worker at a youth outreach program where she encountered a genderqueer male client who was also exploited by an intimate partner. The chapter closes with recommendations for prevention, identification, and intervention strategies as well as areas for future research.

Sue Micetic addresses the heightened risk of runaway and homeless youth related to domestic sex trafficking, but moves her focus beyond vulnerability to how the risk may be reduced. In Chapter Thirteen, Micetic looks at current legislation and intervention efforts in the U.S., and argues that current systems are not sufficiently protecting runaway and homeless youth from sex trafficking victimization. Micetic focuses on historical and current efforts, and proposes preventative measures aimed at improving the treatment and care of these minors, while at the same time reducing their risk of domestic sex trafficking victimization.

Chapter Fourteen focuses on a specific system of vulnerability in which April Houston examines how military conflict creates an environment that allows human trafficking, including sex trafficking and trafficking of child soldiers, to thrive. Using case studies from various conflict zones, Houston provides the reader with recommendations to address conflict-related sex trafficking.

Sarah Hupp Williamson discusses how factors relating to economic and gender based inequalities as well as corruption and globalization act as “push” factors for human trafficking. In Chapter Fifteen, countries affected by the Warsaw Pact are examined specifically because of their political restructuring and geographical location. Using the theoretical framework of institutional anomie theory, Williamson highlights how the transition from a centrally planned economy to a capitalist free market impacts women in a multitude of ways, and is ultimately connected to their victimization through trafficking.
In addition to this volume, there are five additional chapters available for free on the book’s webpage on the publisher’s website that look specifically at the traffickers and buyers of sex trafficking; an area that is discussed relatively infrequently in the existing literature. In the chapter titled “Interviews with Human Traffickers: Perceptions of Sex and Violence,” Emily Troshynski and Jennifer Blank present their findings based on interviews with sex traffickers. Specifically, Troshynski and Blank examine how traffickers perceive the international sex trade industry. The purpose of looking at traffickers’ perceptions of sex trafficking is for the reader to better understand sex trafficking in a world that economically thrives on the trafficking of women and girls for sexual exploitation.

In the chapter “A Comparison of DV/ IPV and Sex Trafficking: How Understanding Batterers Can Help Develop Programming for “Boyfriend” Pimp/ Traffickers,” Erica Michelson compares and contrasts the backgrounds and characteristics of batterers and traffickers. Based on a number of similarities, Michelson argues that the current batterer programming could be applied to pimps and could eventually lead to successful intervention efforts.

Eleanor Levine also looks at intervention programs, but rather than focusing on the trafficker, she focuses on the buyers in “The Impact of John Schools on Demand for Prostitution.” Levine specifically looks at John schools and the impact of such programs on recidivism rates. Levine looks beyond the potential of recidivism reduction to the broader impact such schools may have on society and on prostitution. Levine critically examines these programs and argues that such programs may contribute to more dangerous conditions for those who sell sex.

In “Child Exploitation for Labor and Sex,” Suman Kakar looks at child labor, specifically focusing on the social and economic system of India that fosters a system of child labor. Kakar notes the structural and cultural dynamics that cause child trafficking to persist despite international and national legislation. The chapter concludes with a critical discussion of child exploitation and its effect on global capital.

Lynly Egyes provides the reader with her first-hand experiences of working with trafficked people in LGBTQ immigrant communities in “Borders and Intersections: The Unique Vulnerabilities of LGBTQ1 Immigrants to Trafficking.” She argues that sexual orientation and/or gender identity increases vulnerable status. These vulnerabilities are heightened by family, community, the criminal justice system, and the societal treatment of LGBTQ individuals. Egyes provides real life examples to highlight specific vulnerability factors in the social and legal arena, and the relationship to sex trafficking.
The goal of this edited volume is to add to the ongoing discussion of human trafficking; from types, to victims, to perpetrators. The reader is practical for students, advocates, and practitioners all involved in various anti-trafficking efforts. It was a pleasure to work with the contributing authors, and we hope that Broadening the Scope of Human Trafficking Research will highlight the discussion needed to better understand human trafficking and all of its forms.
Acknowledgments

We would like to thank our family and friends for supporting us and all of our endeavors. We would like to thank the authors for contributing the chapters, for without their efforts, this reader would not be possible. Lastly, we would like to thank the team at Carolina Academic Press for working with us from the onset of this project to the very end.