Series Editor's Foreword

The Carolina Academic Press African World Series, inaugurated in 2010, offers significant new works in the field of African and Black World studies. The series provides scholarly and educational texts that can serve both as reference works and as readers in college classes.

Studies in the series are anchored in the existing humanistic and the social scientific traditions. Their goal, however, is the identification and elaboration of the strategic place of Africa and its Diaspora in a shifting global world. More specifically, the studies will address gaps and larger needs in the developing scholarship on Africa and the Black World.

The series intends to fill gaps in areas such as African politics, history, law, religion, culture, sociology, literature, philosophy, visual arts, art history, geography, language, health, and social welfare. Given the complex nature of Africa and its Diaspora, and the constantly shifting perspectives prompted by globalization, the series also meets a vital need for scholarship connecting knowledge with events and practices. Reflecting the fact that life in Africa continues to change, especially in the political arena, the series explores issues emanating from racial and ethnic identities, particularly those connected with the ongoing mobilization of ethnic minorities for inclusion and representation.

Notes on the Contributors

Bonny Ibhawoh is a professor of History and Global Human Rights at McMaster University, Canada. He has taught in universities in Africa, the United Kingdom, the United States, and Canada. He was previously a human rights fellow at the Carnegie Council for Ethics and International Affairs, New York; a research fellow at the Danish Institute for Human Rights, Copenhagen, Denmark; and an associate member of the Centre for African Studies, School of Oriental and African Studies, University of London, UK. He is the author of several books and journal articles on human rights and imperial history, including Imperialism and Human Rights, Imperial Justice: Africans in Empire's Court, and Human Rights in Africa.

Serges Djoyou Kamga holds an LLD from the Centre for Human Rights at the University of Pretoria and is currently an associate professor at the Thabo Mbeki African Leadership Institute, University of South Africa. He is a member of the “building committee” of the Cross-Cultural Human Rights Centre, a consortium of one European university, ten Chinese universities, and four African universities aimed at bringing concepts and ideas from the global south in the area of human rights to northern audiences. His areas of interest include leadership and African renaissance, development and human rights, human rights from a cross-cultural perspective, and disability rights. He is a co-editor of the African Disability Rights Yearbook.

Ogenga Otunnu is an associate professor of history at DePaul University. He is the co-founder of the Center for Forced Migration Studies at Northwestern University. He has lectured at the summer program on refugees and forced migration at the Centre for Refugee Studies at York University for more than a decade. Otunnu has trained human rights organizations and NGOs working with displaced populations. He has published extensively on genocide, causes and consequences of forced migration, resettlement policies, environmental displacements, nationalism and forced displacement, xenophobia against refugees and immigrants, human rights in Africa, and conflict resolution and peace building in postconflict societies. Otunnu is the author of Crisis of Legitimacy and Political Violence in Uganda, 1890 to 1979.

Bernard Steiner Ifekwe is a senior lecturer in history at University of Uyo, Nigeria. He has published various articles and book chapters in the areas of labor history, Rastafarianism, Jamaican folk history, and the African diaspora.

Arinpe G. Adejumo is a professor of Yoruba literature and head of the department of Linguistics and African Languages, University of Ibadan, Nigeria. She is a poet, playwright, and literary critic. Many of her publications articulate the interface between literature and other cognate disciplines, gender discourse, and the functionality of literature in society, growth, and development.

Felicia Ohwovoriole is an associate professor of English at the University of Lagos, and she specializes in West African oral literature. She obtained a BA in English literature from the University of Benin, Benin-City, Nigeria, MA in Education and a PhD from the University of Lagos. She has been widely published on the oral traditions of the Urhobo community in West Africa. Her articles have appeared in various journals such as the African Conflict and Peacebuilding Review and International Journal of English and Literature.

Chinedu Anumudu and Owusu Ansah Boakye are graduate students in the Department of Adult Education at Texas State University.

Okaka Opio Dokotum is an associate professor of literature and film and head of the literature department at Kyambogo University in Uganda. His research fields are literature—film adaptation theory, trauma aesthetics, performative poetics, and Ugandan literature. Dokotum is currently a Fulbright African Research Scholar based in Northern Illinois University where he is also teaching Aspects of African Film. He is currently working on a project entitled “Reimagining African Literary Scholarship through Film Adaptation Studies.” Dokotum has published articles in Lagos Historical Review, African Conflict and Peace Building Review, East African Literary and Cultural Studies, and Journal of Africa Cinemas. His postdoctoral manuscript, Hollywood and Africa: Recycling the “Dark Continent” Myth from Thor, Lord of the Jungles (1913) to Exodus: Gods and Kings (2014), funded by the Africa Humanities Program, is being considered for publishing by University of South Africa Press.

Delphine Fongang is an assistant professor at North Carolina Central University. Her teaching and research interests include postcolonial literature/theory, African diaspora studies, African women's life writing, and feminist theory/pedagogy. Her publications have appeared in African and Black Diaspora: An International Journal, a/b: Auto/Biography Studies, Research in African Literatures, and Spectrum: A Journal on Black Men.

Rita Keresztesi received her PhD in literature from the University of California at Santa Cruz in 1999. She is an associate professor of English at the University of Oklahoma. She teaches courses on ethnic American modernism, the Harlem Renaissance, black arts/Black Power, postcolony/West African cinema, and theory and cultural studies. Her interdisciplinary interests include Afro-Caribbean and West African culture and politics in film and music. Rita was a Fulbright Scholar at the Department of Anglophone Studies, University of Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso from 2010–2011. She is the author of Strangers At Home: American Ethnic Modernism between the World Wars and the co-editor of the book The Western in the Global South with MaryEllen Higgins and Dayna Oscherwitz.

Felipe Fanuel Xavier Rodrigues is a professor of Africana religions, comparative literature, and Afro-Brazilian cultural studies. He holds a PhD in comparative literature and a BA in letters from the State University of Rio de Janeiro. He was a Fulbright Visiting Scholar at Dartmouth College (2014–2015). His dissertation on contemporary black women writers in Brazil and the US is currently being revised for publication. He is also a seasoned translator.

Bosede F. Afolayan is a senior lecturer in the Department of English, University of Lagos, Nigeria where she teaches courses on drama. Her areas of interest include comparative drama, African literature, Nollywood studies, and women studies. She has been published in all these areas in both local and international journals. She also has two plays to her credit: Look Back in Gratitude and Once upon an Elephant.
