Series Note

Carolina Academic Press' state-specific criminal justice series fills a gap in the field of criminal justice education. One drawback with many current introduction to criminal justice texts is that they pertain to the essentially non-existent "American" criminal justice system and ignore the local landscape. Each state has its unique legislature, executive branch, law enforcement system, court and appellate review system, state supreme court, correctional system, and juvenile justice apparatus. Since many criminal justice students embark upon careers in their home states, they are better served by being exposed to their own states' criminal justice systems. Texts in this series are designed to be used as primary texts or as supplements to more general introductory criminal justice texts.

About the Authors

Andrea Cantora is an Assistant Professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. She has conducted qualitative research and program evaluations on juvenile justice programs, women reentry, and urban crime. Her work has been published in a number of reputable journals. Dr. Cantora has worked directly with incarcerated populations since 2005, including the development of a women's reentry program in New York City. She currently teaches in the Prison Scholar Program at Jessup Correctional Facility in Maryland. Most recently she has launched the University of Baltimore's Second Chance College Program through the U.S. Department of Education's Second Chance Pell Grant Experimental Sites Initiative.

Patricia S. Hall is a partner in the law firm of Levi, Franke & Hall, and an Adjunct Professor at the University of Baltimore. Her areas of specialty include, but are not limited to, Criminal Law & Procedure, Cybercrime, and Moot Court & Family Law. She completed her J.D. in 1988 at the University of Baltimore, School of Law.

Heather L. Pfeifer is an Associate Professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore and Director of the Master of Science in Criminal Justice Program. Her research interests focus on childhood victimization, its relationship to offending, and implementing trauma-informed policy and practices. She has been involved in numerous federal and state funded research projects involving substance abuse, juvenile delinquency, victim services, and trauma-informed care. She also serves as Associate director of the Roper Victim Assistance Academy of Maryland.

Kenneth W. Robertson is the Lead Public Health Advisor for the $78 million Criminal Justice Grants Program at the Center for Substance Abuse Treatment (CSAT) within the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. As SAMHSA's subject matter expert on criminal justice issues related to substance abuse treatment and recovery services, he oversees a team of project officers managing numerous federal criminal justice–substance abuse treatment grant programs.

Jeffrey Ian Ross is a Professor in the School of Criminal Justice, College of Public Affairs, and a Research Fellow of the Center for International and Comparative Law, and the Schaefer Center for Public Policy at the University of Baltimore. He has researched, written, and lectured primarily on corrections, policing, political crime, violence, abnormal-extreme criminal behavior, and crime and justice in American Indian communities for over two decades. Ross' work has appeared in many academic journals and books, as well as popular media.

Renita Seabrook is an Associate Professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. Her research interests include offender rehabilitation, program evaluation, and criminological theory. Currently, Dr. Seabrook is a 2014 Community Fellow by the Open Society Institute (OSI)-Baltimore. As an OSI-Baltimore Fellow, she established the Helping Others 2 Win Program, an experiential learning environment that affords pre-and post-release adult female offenders viable reentry services.

Debra L. Stanley is a Professor and Executive Director of the School of Criminal Justice, University of Baltimore, and Director of the Roper Victim Assistance Academy of Maryland. Her research has supported policy and system change in the areas of crime victimization, child homicide, substance abuse prevention and treatment, offender reentry and diversion programs, drugs and crime, and program development and evaluation. She currently serves as the President of the American Society of Victimology.

Charles S. Tumosa is a Professor of the Practice in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. He also serves as the Director of the undergraduate Forensic Studies Program. Charles S. Tumosa has a Ph.D. in Chemistry from Virginia Tech and has been in the Forensic Sciences since 1971, first as Head of the Philadelphia Police Criminalistics Laboratory and later as a Research Scientist at the Smithsonian Institution. His vast research has been published around the world in multiple languages.

Gabriela Wasileski is Assistant Professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. She also serves as the Director of the Bachelor of Science in Criminal Justice Program at the University of Baltimore. Her teaching and research focus on comparative immigration policies, human rights, gender, crime and victimization.

Benjamin S. Wright is an Associate Professor in the School of Criminal Justice at the University of Baltimore. His primary research interests include the study of police background characteristics, police ethical behavior and using pre-employment screening techniques to predict job performance. His areas of teaching interest include criminal procedure; criminological perspectives; minorities, crime and justice; research methods in criminal justice and such critical law enforcement issues as policing special populations and policing in contemporary society.
