Professor Page Laws deserves the first compliment for suggesting the creative phrases for the book's title and themes. She borrowed them from Yeats' poem "The Second Coming," and they fit perfectly well with the contents of this volume. In the two years that it took to write the essays—all original and published here for the first time—the authors endured my nagging and rude reminders. It is time to apologize, but not in any sincere manner since my habits have become fully formed. Full blessings are now due to Dr. Sarah Freligh for the copyediting and Sam Saverance for the illustrations. Roy Samuel Doron assisted with last minute checking of the manuscript for typographical errors. Finally, I thank the publishers, who showed a keen interest in bringing the book to print.
