

American Conflicts Law:
Cases and Materials
Sixth Edition

2018-2019 Supplement

By

ROBERT L. FELIX

James P. Mozingo III Professor Emeritus of Law
University of South Carolina

RALPH U. WHITTEN

Senator Allen A. Sekt Professor Emeritus of Law
Creighton University

RICHARD H. SEAMON

Professor of Law
University of Idaho

JESSE M. CROSS

Assistant Professor of Law
University of South Carolina

CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS

COPYRIGHT © 2018
CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS, LLC
ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

CAROLINA ACADEMIC PRESS
700 KENT STREET
DURHAM, NORTH CAROLINA 27701
TELEPHONE (919) 489-7486
FAX (919) 493-5668
E-MAIL: CAP@CAP-PRESS.COM
WWW.CAP-PRESS.COM

PREFACE

This Supplement is intended to update teachers and students on the latest cases and literature pertinent to the course in Conflict of Laws. Since the publication of the Sixth Edition of the casebook in 2015, there have been no major developments in the general area of choice of law that would constitute a fundamental alteration in the direction of the “Conflicts Revolution” that constitutes the main subject matter of the casebook. However, the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015), holding that the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses prohibit a state from refusing to allow same-sex marriages under its own law, will affect DOMA and full faith and credit issues discussed in Chapter 7 of the casebook. In addition, the Court’s decision in Franchise Tax Board v. Hyatt, 578 U.S. ___, 136 S. Ct. 1277 (2016), discussed in Chapter 3 of this supplement adds a new, and somewhat uncertain, dimension to the jurisprudence of the Full Faith and Credit Clause as a limitation on state choice-of-law authority. The Supreme Court also continues to restrict the ability of the states to assert personal jurisdiction over nonresidents under the theories of general and specific jurisdiction that it has evolved under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The latest cases are discussed in Chapter 10B2b(1) & (2) of this supplement. Finally, the American Law Institute has begun a new project to construct the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS. Although the project is in its early stages, as it progresses it may be expected to influence court decisions in the Conflicts area significantly. The new restatement is discussed throughout this supplement where relevant.

Robert L. Felix
Ralph U. Whitten
Richard H. Seamon
Jesse M. Cross
June 2018

Table of Contents

CHAPTER 1 INTRODUCTION	1
C. A BRIEF HISTORY	1
4. The First Restatement: Beale and the Critics.....	1
CHAPTER 2 CHOICE OF LAW: SOME GENERAL PROBLEMS.....	3
A. SELECTING A CHOICE-OF-LAW THEORY.....	3
1. The Vested Rights Approach	3
2. Currie’s Governmental Interest Analysis.....	3
4. Leflar’s Choice-Influencing Considerations	3
5. The “Most Significant Relationship” Approach	4
8. The Restatement Third.....	4
B. CLASSIFYING RULES AS SUBSTANTIVE OR PROCEDURAL	6
1. Rules of Evidence	6
4. Statutes of Limitations	6
5. Other Issues.....	9
C. CHARACTERIZING THE ISSUES	9
D. PROTECTING THE FORUM’S PUBLIC POLICY	10
E. USING DÉPEÇAGE	12
F. COPING WITH RENVOI	12
G. ASCERTAINING A PERSON’S DOMICILE	12
H. PROVING FOREIGN LAW.....	14
I. DEALING WITH EXTRATERRITORIAL CONDUCT IN CRIMINAL CASES	16
CHAPTER 3 CHOICE OF LAW: SOME CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEMS	18
A. THE FULL FAITH AND CREDIT AND DUE PROCESS CLAUSES	18
1. The Full Faith and Credit Clause	18
2. The Due Process Clause.....	20
3. Convergence?.....	20
B. OTHER CONSTITUTIONAL CLAUSES.....	22
2. The Privileges and Immunities Clause.....	22
CHAPTER 4 CHOICE OF LAW: TORTS.....	23
A. THE TRADITIONAL RULES METHOD	23
B. THE NEW YORK EXPERIENCE AND APPROACH.....	23
C. SECOND RESTATEMENT: THE MOST SIGNIFICANT RELATIONSHIP	23
1. The Restatement (Third) of Conflict of Laws.....	24
D. LEFLAR’S CHOICE-INFLUENCING CONSIDERATIONS	26
E. OTHER APPROACHES	27
2. Eclectic Solutions: Combining Choice-of-Law Approaches	27
F. SPECIAL PROBLEMS: MASS TORTS.....	28
2. Class Actions	28
3. Choice of Law: The ALI Proposal	28

CHAPTER 5 CHOICE OF LAW: CONTRACTS	29
A. TRADITIONAL APPROACHES	29
B. SOME MODERN APPROACHES	29
1. When the Contract Does Not Contain a Choice-of-Law Clause	29
2. When the Contract Contains a Choice-of-Law Clause	31
C. SOME SPECIAL PROBLEMS	33
2. The Uniform Commercial Code	33
CHAPTER 6 CHOICE OF LAW: PROPERTY, TRUSTS, AND ESTATES	34
A. LAND	36
CHAPTER 7 FAMILY LAW	38
A. MARRIAGE AND ITS TERMINATION	38
1. Marriage	38
2. Divorce	39
3. Annulment	40
B. SUPPORT: DECREES/ORDERS	41
1. “Divisible Divorce”	41
2. Support—Generally	42
c. Uniform Interstate Family Support Act	42
C. CUSTODY	42
1. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Enforcement Act	42
3. International Child Abduction	43
4. Adoption	43
D. MARITAL PROPERTY	45
1. Common Law and Community Property Regimes	45
2. Party Autonomy in Marital Property Arrangements	46
a. Unilateral Party Autonomy	46
b. Bilateral Party Choice	46
CHAPTER 8 VERTICAL CHOICE OF LAW	48
B. THE ERIE DOCTRINE	48
C. HORIZONTAL CHOICE OF LAW UNDER ERIE	49
D. ASCERTAINING STATE LAW	51
E. FEDERAL COMMON LAW AFTER ERIE	51
CHAPTER 9 JUDGMENTS	53
B. ENFORCEMENT OF STATE JUDGMENTS	53
2. Basic Policies and Exceptions	53
a. Basic Policies	53
b. Exceptions and Potential Exceptions to the Basic Policies	54
(1) General and Special Public Policy Exceptions	54
(2) Lack of Personal Jurisdiction	54
(3) Lack of Subject-Matter Jurisdiction	54
(4) Fraud	55

(5) Statutes of Limitations	55
(7) Administrative Adjudications	56
C. ENFORCEMENT OF FEDERAL JUDGMENTS	57
D. ENFORCEMENT OF FOREIGN NATION JUDGMENTS	57
CHAPTER 10 PERSONAL JURISDICTION	61
A. SERVICE OF PROCESS AND NOTICE.....	61
2. Long-Arm Process	61
3. Due Process Requirement of Adequate Notice.....	61
B. FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT RESTRICTIONS ON STATE-COURT JURISDICTION.....	61
1. Traditional Territorial Restrictions	61
a. Pennoyer v. Neff	61
b. Evolution of the Territorial Rules	62
2. Development of Modern Restrictions on State-Court Jurisdiction.....	62
a. Status of Traditional Territorial Rules After International Shoe	63
b. General and Specific Jurisdiction	63
(1) General Jurisdiction	63
(2) Specific Jurisdiction.....	67
c. Amenability to Process in Federal Court	70
C. GROUNDS FOR DECLINING JURISDICTION	71
1. Forum-Selection Clauses	71
2. Forum Non Conveniens	72
5. Local Actions	73
6. Comity?.....	73
D. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST EXTRASTATE ACTIONS	73

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

C. A BRIEF HISTORY

4. The First Restatement: Beale and the Critics

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 10.]

Laura E. Little, Conflict of Laws Structure and Vision: Updating a Venerable Discipline, 31 GEORGIA ST. U. L. REV. 231 (2015).

[Replace Note 6 on page 10.]

The latest version of Professor Symeonides' review is, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1 (2018). His review reveals a shift by Wyoming to the Second Restatement system in 2017, reducing the number of jurisdictions following the traditional vested rights system and increasing the number of Second Restatement jurisdictions. See id. at 58 – 61. The survey for 2016 is Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2016: Thirtieth Annual Survey, 65 AM. J. COMP. L. 1 (2017). The survey for 2015 is, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2015: Twenty-Ninth Annual Survey, 64 AM. J. COMP. L. 221 (2016). Professor Symeonides has also recently published a treatise on the subject: SYMEON C. SYMEONIDES, CHOICE OF LAW (2016).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 11.]

At this printing, the latest work product of the ALI on the third restatement is found in RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017). The draft contains Chapter 6, Torts, Topic 1, General Rules, §§ 6.01 – 6.09, Topic 2, Particular Torts and Issues, §§ 6.10 – 6.11 and black letter only of §§ 6.12 – 6.21; Chapter 7, Property, Topic 1, Core Real Property Issues, §§ 7.01 7.07 revised, Topic 2, Property Transactions, §§ 7.08 – 7.13 revised, and Chapter 8, Contracts, Topic 1, General Rules, §§ 8.01 – 8.10. See also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (AM. LAW INST., Council Draft No. 2 September 12, 2017) (containing provisions of previous preliminary drafts approved by the ALI Council and sections yet to be considered. The reporters met with the Advisers and Members Consultative Group on October 26, 2017, where the draft was extensively discussed and criticized. Individual provisions of the draft and earlier drafts will be discussed throughout this supplement where relevant.

One matter that deserves comment at this point is the philosophy of the draft. As an examination of the materials in the principal casebook will demonstrate, the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS was not a true restatement of the law of conflicts, but an attempt to walk a line between rules and a more fluid analytical approach to the subject. In the current draft of the third restatement, the ALI has reprinted at pages x – xi an excerpt of the Revised Style Manual approved by the ALI Council in January 2015. This manual makes it clear that the reporters are not bound to follow “a preponderant balance of authority,” assuming that one exists, but are to propose the “better rule and provide the rationale for choosing it.” In addition, the new restatement is to anticipate the “direction in which the law is [trending] and [express] that development in a manner consistent with previously established principles.” See Preliminary Draft No. 3, supra, at x. This makes it clear that the third restatement will also not be a real “restatement,” at least not in all areas. It also insures that the development of the restatement in many areas will be highly controversial, as there is bound to be significant controversy over the “better rule” of conflicts in some areas, as well as controversy over the direction in which law is “trending.” Also, note that the reporters have provided no guidance about how they will decide whether their proposals will be real restatements, predictions of legal trends, or better rules in particular areas; nor have they described any principles by which these decisions will be made. When you encounter provisions of the proposed new restatement in future chapters of this supplement, you should ask whether the ALI is improving or worsening an already bad situation. See also Donald Earl Childress III, International Conflict of Laws and the New Conflicts Restatement, 27 DUKE J. COMP. & INT’L L. 361 (2017).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 2

CHOICE OF LAW: SOME GENERAL PROBLEMS

A. SELECTING A CHOICE-OF-LAW THEORY

1. The Vested Rights Approach

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 26.]

Professor Symeonides' latest survey indicates that the number of states following the traditional approach in torts has been reduced to 9 and in contracts to 11 by a decision of the Wyoming Supreme Court shifting to the Second Restatement methodology. See Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 58 – 61 (2018).

2. Currie's Governmental Interest Analysis

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 34.]

See also Symposium, Choice-of-Law Methodology: Fifty Years After Brainerd Currie, 2015 U. ILL. L. REV. 1847 (articles by Professors Symeonides, Singer, Kay, Brilmayer, Weinberg, and Hay).

[Insert after Note 4 on page 34.]

5. In In re APA Assessment Fee Litigation, 766 F.3d 39 (D.C. Cir. 2014), the parties agreed in the district court that choice-of-law analysis was unnecessary because the unjust enrichment law of all the states was the same. Thus, D.C. law was applied. When the laws of all the potentially concerned states are the same, should the case be classified as a “false conflict” or as a “no conflict” case? Is there a difference between the two?

4. Leflar's Choice-Influencing Considerations

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 46.]

Sagi Peari, Better Law as Better Outcome, 63 AM. J. COMP. L. 155 (2015).

5. The “Most Significant Relationship” Approach

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 61.]

According to Professor Symeonides’ latest review, the number of Second Restatement states has increased to 25 in torts and 24 in contracts based on a 2017 decision of the Wyoming Supreme Court. See Simeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 58 – 61(2018). See also Elworthy v. First Tenn. Bank, 391 P.3d 1113 (Wyo. 2017) (action arising out of two related mortgage transactions, one on land in California and one on land in Wyoming; claims by plaintiff for breach of contract, interference with prospective economic advantage, declaratory judgment cancelling mortgage on Wyoming property, misrepresentation, and reformation and restitution; Wyoming Supreme Court applies separate RESTATEMENT (SECOND) analysis to each issue in case, concluding that Wyoming law applied to breach of contract claims and fraud claims and that because restitution and declaratory claims were derivative of the fraud claims, Wyoming law also applied to them).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 62.]

See also Janvey v. Brown, 767 F.3d 430 (5th Cir. 2014) (Texas Supreme Court employs a false conflicts analysis rather than engaging in a full Second Restatement analysis).

[Insert after Subsection 7 at page 64.]

8. The Restatement Third

As indicated in Chapter 1, the American Law Institute has embarked on a project to frame a third restatement of Conflicts. The project is in its embryonic stages as of now, but several points can be made about the general direction of the project. First, the Reporters believe that sufficient data exists about modern choice-of-law practice to “restate” that practice in the form of rules. As a consequence, what was section 6 of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) will no longer be a “grab-bag centerpiece,” in the new restatement, but “an escape hatch, designed to be sparingly invoked, in the unusual case in which one of the rules of the Restatement Third disregards a manifestly more appropriate result.” See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICTS OF LAW at xiv (Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 10, 2015) (Reporters’ Memorandum). The shift in direction toward “restating” rules must, however, be taken in conjunction with the project’s avowed purposed to create “better” rules for those that might currently be clear enough to be “restated,” as previously noted at the end of Chapter 1 of this supplement. Currently the project is not sufficiently developed to determine how, exactly, all of this will work.

Preliminary Draft No. 1 was considered by the Advisers and Members Consultative Group in October of 2015. Thereafter, substantial changes in the draft were made, especially to the “habitual residence” sections, which had been designed to replace the traditional concept of domicile in choice of law. (The habitual residence sections and changes are discussed in Section G on Domicile, below. In Preliminary Draft No. 2, additional substantive material was added to the torts and property sections of the proposed table of contents.)

Preliminary Draft No 2 was discussed by the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group in October of 2016. Following this, the Reporters submitted Council Draft No. 1 for consideration in December of 2016. The council draft, however, contained only Chapter 1 (Introduction §§ 5.01 – 5.05), Chapter 2 (Domicile §§ 2.01 – 2.09), and Chapter 5 (Choice of Law) Topic 1 (Introduction §§ 5.01 – 5.05) and Topic 2 (Foreign Law §§ 5.06 – 5.08). The Council considered the draft in January 2017 and approved Chapter 1 and §§ 2.01 – 2.07 of the draft, reserving consideration of the later sections for future consideration because of considerations of time. The approved sections, together with modifications resulting from the Council’s discussion, will be presented to a meeting of the full American Law Institute membership at some yet to be determined time in the future.

Preliminary Draft No. 3, containing drafts of Chapter 6 (Torts), Chapter 7 (Property), and Chapter 8 (part of Contracts) was discussed by the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group in October of 2017. Council Draft No. 2 was later considered by the council. As of the date of this writing, the Council has approved of Chapters 1 (Introduction), 2 (Domicile), and 5 (Choice of Law). No chapters have as yet been submitted to the membership for consideration and approval at an annual May meeting.

The following description is of the proposed table of contents as set out both in Preliminary Drafts No. 1 & 2. (The table of contents can also be viewed on the ALI’s website.) This is because Preliminary Draft No. 1 contained a complete proposed table of contents, but Preliminary Draft No. 2 omits some chapters of this table of contents from the draft while titling some chapters differently.

Thus, the following is the most current information available about what the new restatement will contain and how the chapters will be arranged: Excerpts from the Revised Style Manual of the ALI approved by the Council in January 2015; Reporters’ Memorandum Restatement of the Law Third, Conflict of Laws Preliminary Draft No. 2, Table of Contents; Chapter 1 (Introduction); Chapter 2 (Personal Geographical Links [as submitted to the Council, retitled Domicile]); Chapter 3 (Judicial Jurisdiction [omitted from Preliminary Draft No. 2]); Chapter 4 (Recognition and Enforcement of Judgments [omitted from Preliminary Draft No. 2]); Chapter 5 (Choice of Law) (this chapter currently contains three topics, Topic 1 (Introduction), Topic 2 (Determination of Foreign Law), and Topic 3 (Procedure)); Chapter 6 (Torts); Chapter 7 (Property); Chapter 8 (Contracts); Chapter 9 (Complex Litigation); Chapter 10 (Trusts); Chapter 11 (Families); Chapter 12 (Agency and Partnerships); Chapter 13 (Business Corporations); Chapter 14 (Administration of Estates); and Chapter 15 (State-Federal Issues in the United States [including constitutional limitations on choice of law, extraterritorial legislation, preemption, state law in federal courts, and federal law in state courts]). The Reporters have consciously attempted to place foundational matters at the beginning of the new restatement. Have they succeeded? For example, don’t constitutional limitations on choice of law provide an important context in which all choice-of-law rules operate? If so, should that topic not be considered and restated early in the draft?

Specific provisions of the current drafts will be considered as they become relevant later in this and other chapters.

B. CLASSIFYING RULES AS SUBSTANTIVE OR PROCEDURAL

1. Rules of Evidence

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 68.]

See also Thomas v. United States, 171 A.3d 151 (D.C. 2017) (applying the law of the forum in a criminal prosecution to admit evidence of an intercepted phone conversation rather than the law of the state (Maryland) where the defendant was located when the conversation took place; citing § 138).

[Insert after Note 3 on page 72.]

4. See Thompson v. Coleman, ___ S.W.3d ___, 2018 WL 1960803 (Ky. 2018) (under § 139 evidence that is not privileged under the law of the forum, here Kentucky, should be admitted unless there is some special reason why the forum policy favoring admissibility should not be given effect; here the evidence in question is critical in developing a full record for trial and should be admitted); Andrews v. Ridco, Inc., 863 N.W.2d 540 (S.D. 2015) (holding that under § 139, the state of the most significant relationship to an issue of waiver of privilege with regard to numerous claim files in other cases was the state where the communications with regard to the files took place, not South Dakota, which had no relationship to the claim files other than that the lower court had ordered them produced as part of the discovery process in the immediate case).

4. Statutes of Limitations

[Insert after Note 2 on page 91.]

2(a) In McCarrell v. Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., 153 A.3d 207 (N.J. 2017), New Jersey adopted § 142 of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) for analyzing conflicts problems involving statutes of limitation, continuing a progression of adopting the Second Restatement in general. The case was a products liability action, and the court held that § 142(2) dictated the application of New Jersey's statute of limitations, which contained an equitable tolling rule, rather than Alabama's statute, which did not. The court held that New Jersey had a substantial interest in maintaining the claim to deter New Jersey manufacturers from manufacturing dangerous products and that no exceptional circumstances existed to overcome this interest. The court observed that unless it found New Jersey had no substantial interest in maintaining the claim, it would not reach the question under § 142(b) whether another state (here Alabama) had a more significant relationship to the parties and the occurrence and would bar the claim. Thus, any time New Jersey has a substantial interest in maintaining the claim and there are no exceptional circumstances, that is the end of the inquiry and New Jersey's longer statute applies. After examining the application of § 142 in DeLoach and accompanying materials, review whether you think this approach is correct. Will there ever be a case in which the forum has a substantial interest, there are no exceptional circumstances, and another state is the state of the most significant relationship to the parties and the occurrence? If so, does § 142(2) give appropriate weight to the interests of the state of the most significant relationship? For an extensive description and discussion of McCarrell, see Simeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 62 – 66 (2018). Following the discussion of McCarrell, Professor Symeonides has a useful table describing the number of states following various conflicts approaches to limitations problems and, after that, another useful discussion of choice-of-law clauses and limitations issues. See id. at 66 – 67. On the latter issue, see also Western-Southern Life Assurance Co. v. Kaleh, 879 F.3d 653 (5th Cir. 2018) (complex case involving choice-of-law clauses pointing to Ohio law for some claims and Texas law for others; Texas statute of limitations held procedural under traditional analysis, even though Texas is generally a Second Restatement jurisdiction; no mention of § 142).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 93.]

See also Bartlett v. Commerce Ins. Co., 114 A.3d 724 (N.H. 2015) (New Jersey statute of limitations applied rather than New Hampshire forum statute; when New Hampshire is forum it first determined whether relevant law is substantive or procedural and if substantive, New Hampshire applies Leflar’s five choice-influencing considerations to select applicable law; if procedural, New Hampshire law usually applied; New Hampshire holds statutes of limitations procedural any time either party is a resident of New Hampshire or the cause of action arose in the state).

[Insert at the end of Note 4(b) on page 101.]

Blake Marine Grp. v. CarVal Inv’rs, LLC, 829 F.3d 592 (8th Cir. 2016) (action brought by Alabama plaintiff versus a Minnesota defendant for interference with contract based on actions occurring in Minnesota but injury in Alabama; action untimely under Alabama law but timely under Minnesota law; using the “better law” approach, the court concluded that three of the five choice-influencing considerations were irrelevant while one was applicable but neutral, leaving only advancement of the forum’s governmental interests; court concluded that the forum, Minnesota, did not have an interest in applying its law for the benefit of a noncitizen plaintiff, though Alabama had an interest in compensating an Alabama plaintiff even though that law did not provide for compensation; nevertheless, because Alabama had an interest, that made the Alabama limitations period applicable, barring the action; this analysis makes no sense, does it?). See also Taylor v. First Resolution Inv. Corp., 72 N.E.3d 573 (Ohio 2016) (action by Delaware bank against Ohio consumer for failure to pay credit card debt; action timely under Ohio law, but not under Delaware law; Ohio borrowing statute applied to borrow limitations period of Delaware, because court concluded that cause of action accrued in Delaware where plaintiff made payments to defendant under credit card contract).

[Insert after Note 4(c) on page 102.]

(d) In Boutelle v. Boutelle, 337 P.3d 1148 (Wyo. 2014), the court stated that in applying Wyoming’s borrowing statute to borrow the limitations period of another state, the other state’s statute is not wrenched out of context, but is applied in the context of the other state’s statutes and case law, but this does not mean that the other state's conflict of laws doctrine is applied to produce a renvoi-like situation.

[Insert after Note 5(c) on page 103.]

(d) Taylor v. First Resolution Investment Corp., 72 N.E.3d 573 (Ohio 2016), was an action by a creditor to collect credit card debt from the defendant. The court held that the cause of action accrued in Delaware where the debt was to be paid for purposes of the Ohio borrowing statute. The court also held that it was not unconstitutional to apply the borrowing statute to the claim, which had accrued before the enactment of the statute. The end result was that the action was time barred.

[Insert at the end of Note 6(c) on page 104.]

See also Panico v. Portfolio Recovery Assocs., LLC, 879 F.3d 56 (3d Cir. 2018) (Delaware tolling statute does not operate unless the defendant is not subject to long-arm jurisdiction in the state).

[Insert at the end of Note 4(c) on page 111.]

See also Burdett v. Remington Arms Co., L.L.C., 854 F.3d 733 (5th Cir. 2017) (although Texas applies the most significant relationship test of sections 6 & 145 of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND), the Texas borrowing statute is a codified rule of choice of law that governs the timeliness of actions and must be applied in a diversity case in Texas; borrowing statute borrows shorter limitations period of other state, New York law does not have a statute of repose, but Texas does, and the action is barred under the Texas statute of repose).

[Insert after Note 4(e) on page 111.]

Woodward v. Taylor, 366 P.3d 432 (Wash. 2016) was an extremely odd case from a Second Restatement jurisdiction. The case arose out of an automobile accident in Idaho. The action was brought in Washington, which had a three-year limitations period applicable to the claim, though the action was barred under the two-year Idaho statute. The trial court dismissed, holding Idaho's two-year period applicable, and this was affirmed by the court of appeals. The Washington Supreme Court reversed, however. The court first analyzed the substantive tort law of both Washington and Idaho, concluding that there was no conflict between the substantive law of the two states. It then reasoned that the "significant contacts" analysis did not have to be reached when there was no substantive conflict and that Washington law would consequently be applied. It then referenced the Washington borrowing statute, which provided that if the claim was based on the law of another state, even partly, the limitations period of that state would apply. Because it had already concluded that Washington law would apply to the claim, it then reasoned that Washington's longer statute of limitations would also apply. Section 142 was never mentioned. This was just a decision attempting to avoid the effect of the Washington borrowing statute, wasn't it? See also Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2015) (under most significant relationship test of Ohio law, court applies tort sections and § 6 factors to select Tennessee substantive law in the form of one-year Tennessee statute of repose; § 142 not mentioned); Steen v. Murray, 770 F.3d 698 (8th Cir. 2014) (court applies Nebraska statute of limitations without reference to § 142, even though Nebraska follows the RESTATEMENT (SECOND)).

5. Other Issues

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 114.]

See also O'Brien v. Cessna Aircraft Co., 903 N.W.2d 432 (Neb. 2017) (right to punitive damages determined by most significant relationship approach of Second Restatement and points to selection of Nebraska law, where injury occurred, injured party domiciled, and injured party treated; court applies §§ 145 & 171; punitive damages denied under Nebraska law).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 114.]

See also Channing Real Estate, LLC v. Gates, 161 A.3d 1227 (Conn. 2017) (New York contract law applied under Second Restatement, including New York's parol evidence rule); Tumlinson v. Advanced Micro Devices, Inc., 106 A.3d 983 (Del. 2013) (Delaware forum law rather than Texas law applied to procedural matters; admissibility of expert testimony is a procedural matter whose relevance and reliability should have been analyzed under Delaware law); Phillips v. Carlton Energy Grp. LLC, 475 S.W.3d 265 (Tex. 2015) (under second Restatement, local law of forum determines whether an issue shall be decided by judge or jury (quoting § 129); argument that Nevada, which provided the controlling substantive law, has specified the procedure for adjudicating the issue and thus made it a substantive right is invalid; a state cannot make a decision by a court rather than a jury a substantive right enforceable in all jurisdictions; Nevada cannot supplant the constitutionally guaranteed right to a jury trial in Texas courts by a statute).

C. CHARACTERIZING THE ISSUES

[Insert the following discussion after the introductory paragraph on page 116.]

The American Law Institute has included section 5.03 dealing generally with characterization in its initial provisions on choice of law in its first draft of a third restatement of conflict of laws. Section 5.03(1) provides that the classification of issues or claims and the interpretation of legal terms or concepts involve questions of characterization, and that courts must classify issues and claims in the "appropriate category" under the new restatement. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 5.03(1), cmt. a, at 88 (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015). The section goes on to provide that the classification of issues or claims is generally performed under the forum's law (§ 5.03(2)), as are the classification and interpretation of conflict-of-laws concepts and terms (§ 5.03(3)). (The exception to § 5.03(2) is the new restatement's employment of renvoi under certain circumstances. This is discussed below in Section F.)

The classification and interpretation of internal-law concepts and terms are determined in accord with the law that governs the issue in question (§ 5.03(4)). (Earlier, the draft defines "internal law" of a state as "the body of law, exclusive of the rules of Conflict of Laws, which the courts of that state apply in the decision of controversies brought before them” (§ 1.04(1)). It defines the “law” or the “whole law” of a state as that state’s internal law together with its rules of Conflict of Laws (§ 1.04(2)). In this respect, the draft differs from the RESTATEMENT (SECOND), which uses the term “local law,” rather than “internal law” to refer to the same body of law.)

After examining the process of characterization in this section and later portions of the casebook, ask yourself whether the ALI treatment of the subject, as outlined above, helps you conceptually to understand the process better. Is it a restatement of existing practice, a creation of a “better” rule, or a clarification of existing practice?

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 125.]

See also Harsco Corp. v. CSX Transp., Inc., __ S.E.2d ___, 2017 WL 3821878 (W. Va. 2017) (lex loci delicti and law of place of making point to Ohio law as applicable).

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 126.]

See also Kipling v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 774 F.3d 1306 (10th Cir. 2014) (in dispute between insured and carrier over benefits under four insurance policies issued in Minnesota, lower court erred in applying tort choice-of-law principles to select Colorado law as applicable, and should have analyzed case under contract choice-of-law principles of RESTATEMENT (SECOND)); General Accident Ins. Co. v. Mortara, 101 A.3d 942 (Conn. 2014) (dispute between insurance carrier and insured over company’s obligation to pay underinsured motorist benefits requires a determination of whether tort or contract choice-of-law rules govern the issue; under Connecticut’s existing precedents, dispute is governed by contract choice-of-law rules of RESTATEMENT (SECOND)).

D. PROTECTING THE FORUM’S PUBLIC POLICY

[Insert after Note 3 on page 130 following Wittkowski v. State.]

However, in Talbot v. WMK-Davis, LLC, 380 P.3d 823 (Mont. 2016), the plaintiff, a citizen of Oklahoma, was injured in Montana and applied for workers’ compensation benefits in Oklahoma. He also commenced a tort action in Montana. His employer sought to file a subrogation claim under Oklahoma law in the Montana action. Montana is a Second Restatement state. The Montana Supreme Court invoked section 90 of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND), which provides that no action can be maintained in the forum when it is contrary to the forum’s strong public policy. The public policy of Montana forbade workers’ compensation subrogation claims until the injured party had been made whole.

[Insert after Note 1 on page 132.]

(a) Coon v. The Medical Center, Inc., 797 S.E.2d 828 (Ga 2017), is an extremely odd case. The action was for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on the mishandling of an infant’s body by the defendant. The action of the defendant took place in Georgia, but the plaintiff learned of the action in Alabama where the plaintiff lived and the emotional distress thus took place. Georgia common law required a physical impact for recovery, but Alabama law did not. Ultimately, the trial court applied Georgia law on the ground that the public policy of Georgia would be violated by applying the Alabama rule. The Georgia Court of Appeals affirmed in a seven-judge decision, with six of the judges agreeing that the starting point was the rule of lex loci delicti; but all followed different choice-of-law approaches after that point. In effect, the Georgia Supreme Court followed the approach of one of these judges, Judge McMillian specially concurring. The approach? In the absence of a statute in another state where “the common law is in force,” the Georgia courts will apply the common law as expounded by the courts of Georgia (emphasis added). This approach was based on the presumption that the common law is presumed to be the same in all American states! The court acknowledged that if the common-law rule as expounded by another state was perceived as superior to the Georgia understanding of it, Georgia might adopt the other state’s interpretation as its own rule for Georgia as well as other cases, this was not so in the present case. Thus, the court applied the physical impact requirement and the plaintiff lost. The plaintiff argued that Georgia’s approach was archaic and had outlived its usefulness, but the court rejected this, viewing the approach’s antiquity as a factor that weighed in its favor and, in any event, viewed the argument as the same as criticisms of Georgia’s adherence to the traditional conflicts system. Until it becomes clear to the court that a better rule exists, Georgia is not moving. After studying the constitutional limits on a state’s ability to apply its own law in Chapter 3, you will see that Georgia had ample contacts with the events and parties in the suit to give it a constitutionally sufficient interest in applying its own law under one of the modern systems of conflicts analysis, or even to refuse to apply Alabama’s law under the public policy exception to the traditional system. Nevertheless, suppose Georgia attempted to take this approach in a case in which it did not have any constitutionally sufficient interest in applying its own law. It could not get away with that under such circumstances, could it? For further discussion of Coon, see Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017; Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 22 – 24 (2018).

[Insert at the end of Note 3(c) on page 133.]

See also Brownlee v. Liberty Mutual Fire Ins. Co., 175 A.3d 697 (Md. 2017) (pollution exclusion clause in insurance policy issued and delivered in Georgia but covering Maryland property did not violate the strong public policy of Maryland); West Virginia ex rel. Am. Elec. Power Co., Inc. v. Swope, 801 S.E.2d 485 (W. Va. 2017) (West Virginia “in general” follows lex loci delicti; mere fact that the substantive law of another jurisdiction differs from the law of the forum or is less favorable does not mean that it is contrary to the public policy of the forum).

[Substitute the following new problem for existing Problem 2.17 in the casebook on page 134.]

Problem 2.17. H and W-1 and W-2 are persons in a polygamous union formed in Saudi Arabia where such marriages are legal. They immigrate to State Y where polygamous marriages are not permitted. H then dies intestate. In a probate proceeding in State Y, W-1 and W-2 claim H’s estate under the law of State Y, which provides in cases of intestacy that a decedent’s surviving spouse inherits all of the decedent’s estate. W-1 and W-2’s claim is contested by H’s brothers and sisters, who will inherit the estate if H was not validly married. Under the conflict-of-laws rules of State Y, a marriage valid where performed will be treated as valid in State Y unless it violates the strong public policy of State Y. H's brothers and sisters argue the marriage between H and W-1 and W-2 is invalid under the public policy exception to the marriage rule. In determining whether the public policy exception should be applied to treat the marriage as invalid, what kinds of factors should the courts in State Y consider? Does the difficulty of answering this question indicate what the problems are with the public policy exception generally?

E. USING DÉPEÇAGE

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 143.]

See also Symeon C. Symeonides, Issue-by-Issue Analysis and Dépeçage in Choice of Law: Cause and Effect, 45 U. TOL. L. REV. 751 (2014).

F. COPING WITH RENVOI

[Insert after the introductory paragraph in this section on page 143.]

In its project to create a third restatement of Conflict of Laws, the American Law Institute has proposed a limited use of the doctrine of renvoi. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS § 5.04 (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015) [hereinafter Preliminary Draft No. 1]. Section 5.04(1) states that when directed by its own conflicts law to apply the law of another state, the forum applies the internal law of that state except as stated in § 5.04(2). Section 5.04(2) states that when the objective of the forum's conflicts rule is that the forum reach the same result on the very facts involved as would the courts of "another state," the forum will apply the conflicts rules of the other state, "subject to considerations of practicability and feasibility." In the latter regard, Comment j to the section states that it may be impractical to apply the conflicts rule of another state when it is imprecise or unclear, or when the forum would be compelled to "ascertain and apply" the choice-of-law rules of two or more states. In addition, the comment states that if the conflicts rule of the other state refers to the conflicts rule of the forum, it may be impossible to achieve the objectives of § 5.04(2) and the forum will apply the other state's internal law. See Preliminary Draft No. 1, § 5.04, cmt. j, at 95. Significantly, Comment k also says that another state's conflicts rules, both statutory and common law, may provide valuable information about the territorial boundaries of the state's internal law, though the Reporters state that this will "generally speaking" not be the case. See id. at 95 – 96.

G. ASCERTAINING A PERSON'S DOMICILE

[Insert at the end of Note 4(b) on page 168.]

See also Schill v. Cincinnati Ins. Co., 24 N.E.3d 1138 (Ohio 2014) (in action against insurance company by son for coverage under umbrella policy owned by parents, policy provided coverage for resident relatives who had the same "domicile" as parents; court held that evidence demonstrated that both parents were domiciled in Florida and son was domiciled in Ohio, so there was no coverage, despite the fact that the father spent a good deal of time each year in Ohio working and stayed at son's home while he was there; father carefully tailored his time in Ohio to avoid the operation of Ohio's income tax laws on him.); Susan Frelich Appleton, Leaving Home? Domicile, Family, and Gender, 47 U.C. DAVIS L. REV. 1453 (2014).

[Insert the following after the end of Note 4(b) on page 168 with:]

(c) The American Law Institute's current project to create a third Restatement of Conflicts initially proposed to substitute a concept of "habitual residence" for the existing doctrine of domicile in all areas where domicile is currently relevant in choice of law. See RESTATEMENT OF THE LAW (THIRD) CONFLICT OF LAWS §§ 2.01 – 2.10 (Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015). This approach proved to be controversial. At the October 22, 2015 meeting of the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group, serious questions were raised about whether certain aspects of the habitual residence concept, such as a de-emphasis of the intent requirement of the concept of domicile and the substitution of an "appreciable period of time" requirement to establish habitual residence would really streamline the process of determining a person's connection to a place for purposes of conflict-of-laws determinations. As a result, Preliminary Draft No. 2 of the new restatement, while not altogether abandoning the habitual residence concept, returned to the concept of domicile. See generally RESTATEMENT OF THE LAW (THIRD) CONFLICT OF LAWS §§ 2.01 – 2.10 (Preliminary Draft No. 2, Aug. 12, 2016) [hereinafter Preliminary Draft No. 2]. After discussion by the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group in September 2016, revised provisions were embodied in Council Draft No. 1 (Nov. 11, 2016), and in January 2017, the Council approved §§ 2.01 – 2.07 of the draft. Along with Chapter 1, which the Council also approved, these sections will be presented to the full membership of the ALI at a future May meeting. The remaining sections (§§ 2.08 – 2.10) were considered by the Council in Council Draft No. 2. See RESTATEMENT OF THE LAW (THIRD) CONFLICT OF LAWS (Council Draft No. 2, Sept. 12, 2017) (submitted to the Council on October 19–20, 2017). The following is a brief description of the sections in, Preliminary Draft No. 2.

Section 2.01 (Geographical Links), states generally that conflict-of-laws rules may accord significance to a geographical place because that place is the center of a natural or juridical person's identity for a particular purpose and that place can act as the central geographical link for resolving conflict-of-laws problems. Section 2.02(1) states that a natural person's domicile is presumed to be the center of that person's life and to provide the central geographical link for resolving conflict-of-laws questions. Section 2.02(2) simply states that a statutory designation of a place for resolving conflict-of-laws matters must be respected. Section 2.02(3) states that when a natural person's domicile cannot be ascertained, that person's habitual residence will be used to determine the person's central geographical link. Finally, § 2.02(4) states that when a natural person's domicile or habitual residence cannot be ascertained, "the center of the person's life for the particular conflict-of-laws matter" provides the central geographical link.

Section 2.03(1) defines a natural person's domicile as the place where that person is physically present and intends to make that place the center of the person's life "for the time at least." Section 2.03(2) recites the traditional rule that for a particular conflict-of-laws issue, a person has only one domicile at a time.

Section 2.04 deals with habitual residence. Section 2.04(1) states that habitual residence of a natural person serves as the center of the person's life and rests on the person's domestic, social, economic, professional, familial, and civic activities; a finding of habitual residence does not require proof of intent that the person intends to make the place the center of the person's life. Furthermore, as with domicile, a person has only one habitual residence at one time for purposes of a conflict-of-laws determination.

Section 2.05(1) defines domicile of origin as the person's domicile at birth, and § 2.05(2) provides that the person's domicile at birth is normally with the person's parents or custodial parent.

Section 2.06 deals with the domicile of minors and states that a minor has the domicile of the parent or parents with whom the minor lives unless custody of the minor is contested or the minor does not live with any parent.

Section 2.07 provides that a natural person possessing legal capacity can change the location that serves as the person's central geographical link.

Section 2.08 states that a natural person's domicile does not change because that person is in another place due to physical, emotional, or legal compulsion.

Section 2.09 deals with geographic connections for juridical persons, stating in § 2.09(1) that the place where such a person has its central geographical link depends, for conflict-of-laws purposes, on the particular matter to be resolved, but may be the principal place of business most relevant to the particular conflicts matter, the state of "formation" for registered organizations, or some other place (depending on the particular conflicts matter). Section 2.09(2) provides that the principal place of business of a juridical person is presumed to be its central geographical link, and is determined by reference to the particular matter for which the principal place of business determination must be made, but the subsection qualifies this rule by stating that the central geographical link may be some place other than the principal place of business for purposes of resolving a particular conflicts matter.

Section 2.10 states that in applying its conflicts rules, the forum will use its own law to determine the central geographical link of both natural and juridical persons.

H. PROVING FOREIGN LAW

[Insert after Note 2(d) on page 173.]

(e) A doctrine providing for waiver of a choice-of-law argument could produce a result similar to the forum default rule. When, if ever, should the concept of waiver be employed? Cf. Masters Grp. Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 352 P.3d 1101 (Mont. 2015) (lower court erred in holding defendant's conflict-of-laws argument waived; opposing party had ample notice that defendant was relying on choice-of-law clause to provide for the application of Michigan law); Appalachian Reg'l Healthcare v. Cunningham, 806 S.E.2d 380 (Va. 2017) (choice of law clauses selected Kentucky law, but in the absence of a "showing" as to what Kentucky law requires, it is presumed to be the same as forum law).

[Insert after Note 8 on page 176]:

9. In its project to create a third restatement of conflict of laws, the American Law Institute has proposed in its Topic 2 of Chapter 5 on Choice of Law to restate and clarify the rules on determination of foreign law. This decision is based on the correct view that determination of foreign law is fundamental and foundational in the choice-of-law process. In Preliminary Draft No. 1, these rules were found in §§ 5.06 – 5.13. After discussion at the October 2015 meeting of the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group, these sections were revised, and the revisions were embodied in §§ 5.01 – 5.12; they were discussed at a meeting of the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group in September of 2016. Sections 5.01 – 5.08 were then presented to the ALI Council in Council Draft No. 1, and were later approved by the Council. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS Ch. 5, Topic 2, §§ 5.06 – 5.08 (Foreign Law) (Council Draft No. 2, September 12, 2017). The following description is based on the sections as presented in Council Draft No. 2.

(a) Section 5.06 provides that a party asserting that foreign law applies must give the court and other parties reasonable written notice, but that if no party has given such notice and the court intends to apply foreign law to an issue on its own it should give the parties reasonable notice of its intent. Section 5.07 provides that in determining foreign law, the court may consider any relevant material or sources, including testimony, whether or not admissible under the rules of evidence, that the parties are primarily responsible for providing information about foreign law, but that the court may obtain such information on its own, and that if the court has insufficient information on foreign law, it should request the parties to provide more information or seek such information on its own, but that if the parties do not provide and the court does not obtain sufficient information, the court should “ordinarily” apply foreign law. Section 5.08 provides that the court is responsible for determining foreign law, that “[o]rdinarily” the court should determine foreign law in light of how it is authoritatively interpreted and applied in the foreign state, that if the court needs to decide an issue of foreign law in order to decide a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, it may use information about foreign law even if the material considered is outside the pleadings (which would ordinarily convert such a motion into a motion for summary judgment), that disputes over foreign law do not preclude the court from deciding a motion for summary judgment, and that the court’s determination of an issue of foreign law is reviewable as a question of law.

(b) You should remember that the third restatement project is ongoing and that some of the descriptions above may be inaccurate, at least in detail, because the version submitted to the Council differ (based on discussion by the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group) from the latest preliminary draft, or that the Council Draft is no longer completely accurate because of changes made after discussion among the Reporters and Council.

[Substitute the following problem for problem 2.21 in the casebook.]

Problem 2.21. S-1, S-2, and S-3 are domiciled in State X. They applied for and received a marriage license in the city and county in which they live in State X, even though under State X statutory marriage restrictions, polygamous marriages are illegal. (The license was issued by a county clerk of the county in State X in which S-1, S-2, and S-3 live. The clerk is sympathetic to more than two partners who wish to marry and has stated to the local press that he will issue marriage licenses to such partners because he believes that the equal protection clause of the State X constitution outlaws restrictions on polygamous marriages. He further stated that, as a public official, he is obligated to conform to constitutional restrictions and that this includes the obligation to make an independent judgment about the constitutionality of the laws he is called on to administer. Thus, in his view, he cannot adhere to the traditional restriction on marriage that allows only two people at a time to marry.) S-1, S-2, and S-3 are subsequently married in State X by an appropriate official. They later move to State Y. Under the income tax law of State Y, married couples are taxed at a substantially lower rate than unmarried couples. State Y does not recognize the validity of polygamous marriages. However, State Y has a statute providing that the state will recognize the validity of marriages validly performed under the law of another state. Assume that S-1, S-2, and S-3 are denied the tax benefits afforded to married couples under the law of State Y on the grounds that they are not validly married. They commence an action against the State Y internal revenue commissioner in a State Y trial court for a declaratory judgment that their marriage is valid under the law of State X and must, therefore, be treated as valid under the State Y statute described above. What arguments can be made by the State Y internal revenue commissioner to defeat this action?

I. DEALING WITH EXTRATERRITORIAL CONDUCT IN CRIMINAL CASES

[Insert after the introductory paragraph on page 177.]

The American Law Institute's project to create a third restatement of Conflict of Laws does not attempt to provide rules for criminal conflicts, either substantive or procedural. Is this a mistake? After studying the materials in this subsection, ask yourself whether a restatement of criminal law conflict rules would serve a useful clarifying or other purpose.

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 184.]

For a case containing an excellent discussion and comparison of civil and criminal jurisdiction and issues of due process involved in prosecuting criminal activity that occurred largely, but not completely, outside the forum, see State v. Rimmer, 877 N.W.2d 652 (Iowa 2016). In Rimmer, most of the allegedly criminal activity occurred outside the state, but the court found criminal jurisdiction to exist constitutionally in Iowa on four of the five charges levelled against the defendants because they made false statements in phone calls with insurance investigators located in Iowa, despite the fact that the defendants did not know that they were talking to persons in Iowa.

[Insert after Note 4 on page 184.]

5. See also State v. Rimmer, 877 N.W. 2d 652 (Iowa 2016) (defendants who resided in Wisconsin and Illinois staged auto accident in Chicago to collect on false insurance claims; victim was Wisconsin insurer that paid claims through its Wisconsin bank account; accident investigated by two employees of insurer's Davenport, Iowa office who spoke with defendants by phone; defendants never set foot in Iowa or knew that employees were in Iowa during the phone calls, but made false statements to the investigators during the calls; held: the false statements during the calls caused a detrimental effect in Iowa, which constituted an element of four out of the five crimes charged and defendants' challenges to territorial jurisdiction fail as to those four crimes; defendants' reliance on civil restrictions on personal jurisdiction under the due process clause are not relevant to territorial jurisdiction issues in criminal cases; due process for purposes of criminal territorial jurisdiction is not violated as long as the defendants were on notice that they could be prosecuted somewhere).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 194.]

See also Megan McGlynn, Note, Competing Exclusionary Rules in Multistate Investigations: Resolving Conflicts of State Search-and-Seizure Law, 127 YALE L.J. 406 (2017).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 3

CHOICE OF LAW: SOME CONSTITUTIONAL PROBLEMS

A. THE FULL FAITH AND CREDIT AND DUE PROCESS CLAUSES

1. The Full Faith and Credit Clause

[Insert at the end of the introductory text on page 198.]

The American Law Institute, in its construction of a third restatement of Conflict of Laws, proposes to add a Topic 13 to its Chapter 5 on Choice of Law. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS, at xxi (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015) (Proposed Table of Contents, Topic 13, State-Federal Issues in the United States, including Constitutional Limits on Choice of Law). As yet, this topic has no content. However, there are some places where the Reporters have made (so far, minor) comments on constitutional limits on choice of law. This supplement will identify those areas as appropriate below.

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 223, following Nevada v. Hall excerpt.]

See also Montano v. Frezza, 393 P.3d 700 (N.M. 2017) (Full Faith and Credit Clause does not require a state to apply another state's law in violation of its own public policy; here, Texas' grant of sovereign immunity to doctor does not violate New Mexico's public policy; therefore, New Mexico applies Texas' rule of sovereign immunity as a matter of "comity"). In M.M. v. Pfizer, Inc., 806 S.E.2d 800 (W. Va. 2017), the court, in a products liability action in which the injuries occurred in Michigan, observed that West Virginia follows the law of the place of the injury rule. It then observed that the claims were foreclosed by Michigan law and then stated that "[t]o recognize . . . a claim under West Virginia law where the same already is foreclosed in the same case by the law of another jurisdiction . . . would contradict the full faith and credit due our sister jurisdictions." The full faith and credit statement, if intended as an interpretation of the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution, is simply wrong, is it not?

[Insert after Note 3 on page 223.]

3A. On April 19, 2016, the Supreme Court decided Franchise Tax Board of California v. Hyatt, 578 U.S. ___, 136 S. Ct. 1277 (2016), which involved the resolution after trial of the Hyatt case described in Note 3 of the casebook. The plaintiff was awarded almost $500 million in damages and fees. On appeal, the Franchise Tax Board (FTB) argued that Hall should be overruled or that, in the alternative, the Full Faith and Credit Clause should be read to require that Nevada limit damages against the FTB to $50,000, the same amount that Nevada law would allow in a suit against its own officials. The Nevada Supreme Court limited the award granted to $1,000,000 and ordered a retrial of one of the awards, making it clear that Nevada's limit of $50,000 would not be applied to the retrial. It refused either to apply the California complete immunity rule or its $50,000 cap on damages that would apply to its own officials. The court reasoned that its own officials were subject to systems of legislative control, administrative oversight, and public accountability in Nevada, but that California officials operating in Nevada were not. Therefore, it was justifiable to apply a rule of no immunity against those officials to adequately protect its own citizens.

The Supreme Court granted certiorari, vacated the judgment of the Nevada Supreme Court and remanded. The Court was evenly divided on whether Hall should be overruled. Therefore, the judgment of the Nevada Supreme Court approving the exercise of jurisdiction over the Franchise Tax Board was affirmed by an evenly divided Court. However, the Court held that Nevada had acted unconstitutionally under the Full Faith and Credit Clause in applying a special rule to California officials that would not be applied to their conduct either by California or by Nevada. The majority opined that by disregarding its own rules that would be applicable to the same kind of case, the Nevada Supreme Court demonstrated an unconstitutional hostility to the public acts of another state that violated the Full Faith and Credit Clause. The Court further reasoned that Nevada's "public accountability" explanation "amounts to little more than a conclusory statement disparaging California's own legislative, judicial, and administrative controls" and thus "cannot justify the application of a special and discriminatory rule." 578 U.S. at ___, 136 S. Ct. at 1282. The majority opinion made it clear that the Court was not returning to the "balancing of interests" approach that had been rejected in its earlier cases. Rather, this was a special case in which "in devising a special—and hostile—rule for California, Nevada has not 'sensitively applied principles of comity with a healthy regard for California's sovereign status.'" 578 U.S. at ___, 136 S. Ct. at 1283 (citing Franchise Tax Board v. Hyatt, 538 U.S. 488, 499 (2003)).

Justice Alito concurred in the judgment only, while Chief Justice Roberts and Justice Thomas dissented. (Thus, the number of Justices concurring in Justice Breyer's majority opinion was five.) Throughout the majority opinion, the Court relied on a statement in Carroll v. Lanza, reprinted at page 215 of the casebook, to the effect that the states could not permissibly adopt a "policy of hostility" to the public acts of other states. The Chief Justice's dissenting opinion pointed out, however, that in explaining what adopting a policy of hostility means, Carroll had observed that a state might not refuse to apply another state's law when there were no sufficient policy considerations to warrant the refusal. (Presumably, the other state would also have to have sufficient contacts to justify the application of its law.) The Chief Justice opined that Nevada had given justifiable public policy reasons for applying the rule that it applied—to protect its own citizens and (for disregard of its $50,000 liability limitation) the fact that California officials act outside the system of Nevada legislative, administrative, and public accountability rules that apply to Nevada officials. 578 U.S. at ___, 136 S. Ct. at 1287 – 88. In addition, the dissent pointed out that the structure of the Full Faith and Credit Clause requires (as interpreted by the Court) that states sometimes apply the law of other states. If the majority's approach is correct, that would require Nevada to apply California law if there is really no adequate Nevada public policy justifying disregard of it. Yet that is not what the majority opinion required. Nevada does not have to apply California law, but may apply its own law, as long as it is the same law that it would apply to Nevada officials.

How easy will it be to apply the majority's "hostility" rationale to other cases? For example, suppose a state has a general public policy exception of the sort applied under the vested rights system examined in Chapter 1 of the casebook. A case of first impression arises in which the state applies that public policy exception to refuse to recognize a defense under the law of another state that would be applied to the conduct of a defendant from the other state who is named in a suit in the forum. The public policy exception is broadly worded and thus potentially applicable to the defense in question, but whether it should so apply has never been ruled on, because no case raising the issue has ever arisen, the defense not being applicable to official conduct within the forum. Does it matter whether the forum is applying the claim law of the other state or its own? Suppose it is applying the other state's claim law and that it has no claim law that would apply to the case?

If the plaintiff ultimately obtains a judgment against the Franchise Tax Board, however small, will it be able to execute the judgment in California against a defense of sovereign immunity raised by FTB in the California courts? Review this question after studying the materials in Chapter 9 of the casebook.

See Jeffrey W. Stempel, Hyatt v. Franchise Tax Board of California: Perils of Undue Disputing Zeal and Undue Immunity for Government-Inflicted Injury, 18 NEV. L.J. 61 (2017).

2. The Due Process Clause

[Insert at the end of the introductory paragraph in this subsection.]

See also Nathan S. Chapman & Michael McConnell, Due Process as Separation of Powers, 121 YALE L.J. 1672 (2015).

3. Convergence?

[Insert after Note 1(c) on page 242.]

(d) In the third restatement of conflicts, Reporter's Note on Comment b to § 1.02 (Subject Matter of Conflict of Laws), the reporters state that the Full Faith and Credit Clause forbids states to grant priority to their own law over the law of another state unless doing so promotes some legitimate interest. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS 6 (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015) [hereinafter Preliminary Draft No. 1]. This view is obviously based on the majority agreement on the verbalization of the constitutional test in Allstate, as well as on the same agreement that the Due Process Clause and the Full Faith and Credit Clauses are governed by exactly the same test. See also id. § 5.05, cmt. c, at 98 (due process requires that a state have a significant contact or aggregation of contacts creating state interests such that choice of its law is neither arbitrary nor fundamentally unfair). Notwithstanding the disparate agreement on the verbalization of the test, is it really clear that there is majority agreement on (1) whether the Full Faith and Credit Clause requires the forum to have a legitimate interest in applying its own law or (2) whether the Due Process and Full Faith and Credit Clauses are governed by the same test? For example, if Justice Stevens' viewpoint about the clauses and the tests that govern them are taken to define the holding of the case (because it was his vote that was necessary for affirmance), would it not be clear that, as a matter of full faith and credit, the forum can apply its own law even if it has no interest, as long as it is not impairing the interest of another potentially concerned state? Under his view, isn't it clear that there would be no due process violation unless application of the forum's law would produce "unfair surprise" to the defendant (as Justice Stevens defined it)? Even if one focuses on an issue-by-issue definition of the holding, isn't it clear that the application of the significant contacts producing state interests test by the dissent is closer to Stevens' view than to the plurality's view of how the test should be applied?

(e) In two places in Preliminary Draft No. 1 of the third restatement, the Reporters also indicate that a state court would violate the Full Faith and Credit Clause if it blatantly misinterpreted another state's statute to apply to a set of facts outside the scope of the statute. See Preliminary Draft No. 1, Reporter's Note, cmt. b on § 5.02(1) at 87; id. Reporters Note, cmt. f, page 101. The Reporters cite Sun Oil Co. v. Wortman, 486 U.S. 717, 731 (1988), for this proposition. However, neither Sun Oil, nor any of the authorities cited in the case, support the proposition. Sun Oil only indicated that a blatant misinterpretation of another state's law that would result in inapplication of that law when the other state would apply it to the case would violate the Clause. In fact, there appears to be no case in which the Court has ever held, or even strongly implied, that a blatant misinterpretation of another state's law that would result in its application to a case in which it would not otherwise apply would violate the Clause. Can you think of a real-world situation involving the Reporters' statement that would violate the Clause under any of the views expressed in the Allstate case? See also Charles M. Thatcher, Could a State Court's Selection of Another State's Substantive Law Exceed Constitutional Limitations on Choice of Law?, 61 S.D. L. REV. 20 (2016).

[Insert after the citation to the Sohn article in Note 1(e) on page 254.]

See also sub-note (d) on the ALI's view of the constitutional obligation to interpret other states' laws properly; insert to Note 1 on page 242 above.

[Insert after Note 2(b) on page 255.]

Cf. Montana v. Barrett, 358 P.3d 921 (Mont. 2015) (Idaho convicted defendant of DUI, but, pursuant to a plea bargain, reduced the conviction to a second DUI rather than a third DUI; defendant was subsequently convicted in Montana of another DUI, which the Montana court counted as a fourth DUI for sentencing purposes under Montana law because of the prior Idaho conviction; defendant argued that this violated the Full Faith and Credit Clause, because the reduction of the conviction to a second DUI by the Idaho court defined the effect that Montana owed to the Idaho judgment; the Montana Supreme Court rejected this argument, holding that the obligation to give proper effect to the Idaho judgment (see Chapter 9) was not violated by counting the conviction differently for purposes of Montana law than Idaho would have counted it).

B. OTHER CONSTITUTIONAL CLAUSES

2. The Privileges and Immunities Clause

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 266 following Supreme Court of New Hampshire v. Piper Excerpt.]

See also Schoenefeld v. Schneiderman, 821 F.3d 273 (2d Cir. 2016) (New York statute requiring nonresident members of the bar to maintain a physical office for the transaction of legal business in the state did not violate the Privileges and Immunities Clause because it was not enacted for the protectionist purpose of burdening out-of-state attorneys, even though there was no similar requirement for in-state attorneys; the court indicated that under the Privileges and Immunities Clause as opposed to the Commerce Clause, it is protectionist purpose and not simply disparate effects that violates the Privileges and Immunities Clause).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 266.]

See also Thomas H. Burrell, Privileges and Immunities and the Journey from the Articles of Confederation to the United States Constitution: Courts on National Citizenship and Antidiscrimination, 35 WHITTIER L. REV. 199 (2014).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 4

CHOICE OF LAW: TORTS

A. THE TRADITIONAL RULES METHOD

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 275.]

See also Holt v. United States, 853 F.3d 1056 (9th Cir. 2017) (for purposes of the Federal Tort Claims Act “foreign country exception,” injury occurs where the harm first impinges upon the body, even if it is later diagnosed elsewhere (applying traditional first Restatement system section 377)).

B. THE NEW YORK EXPERIENCE AND APPROACH

[Insert at the end of Note 5(b) on page 306.]

See also Ginsberg v. Quest Diagnostics, Inc., 147 A.3d 434 (N.J. 2016) (wrongful birth actions brought against both New Jersey and New York defendants; both states recognized an action for wrongful birth, but differed in the damages that could be recovered; New Jersey Supreme Court affirmed a determination by intermediate court of appeals that the Second Restatement does not require that the same law apply to all defendants and that a defendant-by-defendant analysis is appropriate “in a majority of the cases”).

C. SECOND RESTATEMENT: THE MOST SIGNIFICANT RELATIONSHIP

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 321 following Bates v. Superior Court excerpt.]

See also Jacked Up, L.L.C. v. Sara Lee Corp., 854 F.3d 797 (5th Cir. 2017) (misappropriation of trade secrets claim governed by Ohio law under most significant relationship test; in such cases, place of injury (Texas) less important than place of conduct (Ohio); third factor in section 145 (place of business, etc.) weighed equally in favor of Texas and Ohio; fourth factor (place where relationship centered) not “particularly relevant” because parties did not have formal relationship; no section 6 analysis).

[Insert at the end of Note 6 on page 337.]

See also McKee v. Cosby, 874 F.3d 54 (1st Cir. 2017) (alleged sexual assault victim sued for defamation in Massachusetts U.S. District Court based on article published in New York newspaper at time victim residing in Michigan; held: Michigan had most significant relationship to suit based on plaintiff’s residence there at time of publication); Couzens v. Donohue, 854 F.3d 508 (8th Cir. 2017) (defamation claim originates where defamatory material first published; action dismissed because barred by limitations under New York law where material first published); Sarver v. Chartier, 813 F.3d 893 (9th Cir. 2016) (action commenced in New Jersey for misappropriation of right of publicity and defamation and transferred to California under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a); applying New Jersey conflicts law, court holds that §§ 150 & 153 of RESTATEMENT (SECOND) create presumption in favor of law of plaintiff's domicile, which plaintiff contended was New Jersey; court not convinced that plaintiff had established domicile in New Jersey, but held that even if he had, the presumption was overcome by the factors in §§ 145 & 146, so that California's law, including its Anti-Slapp statute applied and case was properly dismissed under that statute by the district court); Michel v. NYP Holdings, Inc., 816 F.3d 686 (11th Cir. 2016) (state-court action for defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on article published in New York by New York defendants; plaintiff a citizen of Florida; action removed to Federal Court; court of appeals lists § 145 factors, recognizes that they should be applied with regard to their relative importance in the case, but never performs § 6 analysis; New York law chosen); Western Dermatology Consultants, Inc. v. VitalWorks, Inc., 143 A.3d 564 (Conn. 2016) (court holds that under Second Restatement tort analysis, New Mexico Unfair Trade Practices Act applied rather than Connecticut Act; court evaluated § 145 contacts in connection with § 6 factors, and concluded that the § 6 factors more strongly supported the application of New Mexico's law); Martin v. Gray, 385 P.3d 64 (Okla. 2016) (court held that a claim for bad faith failure to pay insurance benefits was independent of a contract claim and had to be separately evaluated under the Second Restatement's most significant contacts analysis); FutureSelect Portfolio Mgmt., Inc. v. Tremont Grp. Holdings, Inc., 331 P.3d 29 (Wash. 2014) (in investment fraud case, court "formally adopts" § 148 of Second Restatement and applies its previously adopted approach under § 145; this involves a two-step analysis whereby the court first evaluates the contacts with each interested jurisdiction qualitatively and, second, evaluates the interests and public policies of the potentially concerned jurisdictions).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 338.]

See also Bell Helicopter Textron, Inc. v. Arteaga, 113 A.3d 1045 (Del. 2015) (products liability action based on defective component part in helicopter that crashed in Mexico; held: place of injury was not fortuitous, with the result that rebuttable presumption arose that law of Mexico governed liability, damages, and remedies issues in the case; presumption not rebutted by other factors set forth in the Second Restatement; therefore, lower court's determination that Texas law applied reversed).

[Insert before Section D on page 338]

1. The Restatement (Third) of Conflict of Laws

In Preliminary Draft No. 2 of the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS, the Reporters included Chapter 6, Topic 1, containing general rules of torts in §§ 6.01 – 6.08. In the Reporters' Memorandum to Preliminary Draft No. 2, the Reporters' state that their goal is to write "clear and sensible rules" that represent majority practice under modern approach and most codifications. To this end, they relied on the "widely accepted" distinction between conduct-regulating and loss allocating rules as a guide. They "assumed" as a general matter that states have a strong interest in applying conduct-regulating rules to conduct or injury within their borders, but "a negligible interest" in applying such rules to conduct outside their borders. They also assumed that states have a strong interest in applying loss-allocating rules in situations where application would benefit a domiciliary to the detriment of an out-of-state party or another domiciliary, but a weak interest in extending the benefits of loss-allocation rules to out-of-state parties with regard to events occurring within the out-of-state parties' states.

Section 6.01 defines and gives examples of loss allocation rules (tort rules whose primary purpose is to allocate loss among parties on the basis of considerations other than the wrongfulness of conduct). Section 6.02 indicates that when the parties share a "central geographical link" to a state, that state's law will govern issues of loss allocation. Section 6.03(1) deals with situations in which the parties have central geographical links to different states and the conduct and injury occur in a single state, indicating that the latter state's law will govern an issue of loss allocation. However, under § 6.03(2), when the parties have central geographical links to different states and the conduct and injury occur in different states, the law of the state of conduct will govern loss allocation unless the injured person is affiliated with the state of injury, the occurrence of injury in that state was "objectively foreseeable," and the injured person requests the application of the law of the state of the injury.

Section 6.04 defines and gives examples of conduct-regulating rules (rules whose primary purpose is to impose liability for conduct deemed socially undesirable or to absolve parties from liability on the grounds that their conduct was not socially undesirable) and gives examples of such rules (e.g., standards of conduct or safety). Section 6.05 states that when the conduct and injury occur in the same state, that state's laws will govern issues of conduct regulation. Section 6.06 states that when conduct in one state causes injury in another, the law of the state of conduct will govern an issue of conduct regulation, but if the location of the injury was foreseeable, the injured party may select the law of the state of the injury.

Section 6.07 provides a "residual rule." For choice-of-law questions not explicitly provided for in the new restatement, an issue of tort will be governed by "the most appropriate law," which is determined by an assessment of the relevant policies of the forum and other interested states, the relative interests of those states in the particular issue, and the reasonable expectations of the parties.

Finally, § 6.08 provides that parties can choose the law to govern a tort after its occurrence by mutual agreement to the same extent that they could settle the claim, and that the parties may choose the law to govern a tort before it occurs to the same extent that they can choose the law to govern a contract issue that they could not have resolved by an explicit provision in their agreement, and that they may choose a law that eliminates tort liability to the same extent that they can agree to waive that liability.

Preliminary Draft No. 3 revised the above sections (§ 6.01 (Conduct Regulation and Loss Allocation), § 6.02 (Conduct-Regulating Rules), § 6.03 (Loss-Allocating Rules), § 6.04 (Conduct Regulation: Conduct and Injury in Same State), § 6.05 (Conduct Regulation: Conduct and Injury in Different States), § 6.06 (Loss Allocation: Shared Central Link), § 6.07 (Loss Allocation: No Shared Central Link), § 6.08 (Residual Rule), § 6.09 (Party Choice), and added a Topic 2 on particular torts, § 6.10 (Products Liability), § 6.11 (Punitive Damages), and § 6.12 (Defamation), § 6.13 (Multistate Defamation), § 6.14 (Invasion of Privacy), § 6.15 (Multistate Invasion of Privacy), § 6.16 (Environmental Torts), § 6.17 (Alienation of Affections), § 6.18 (Fraud), § 6.19 (Unfair Competition), § 6.20 (Malicious Prosecution or Abuse of Process), § 6.21 (Location of Internet Activity), § 6.22 (Wrongful Death [to come]), § 6.23 Workers Compensation [to come]). See

RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS §§ 6.01 – 6.23 (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017).

The rules governing particular torts are, for the most part, not yet sufficiently developed to warrant specific examination at this time. However, one example will give an indication of the Reporters' approach. Section 6.10, governing products liability, provides that liability for injury caused by a product is determined by (a) the law of the state where the product was delivered to the first end user, provided that state is also either the plaintiff's central link, or the place of the injury, or the place of manufacture, or the defendant's central link "and" the product was available in that state through ordinary commercial channels. If this provision does not apply, then liability will be determined by (b) the law of the plaintiff's central link, provided that state is also either the place of the injury, or the place of manufacture, or the defendant's central link and the product was available in that state through ordinary commercial channels. If the above two provisions do not apply, then liability is determined by (c) the law of the place of manufacture if that state is also the place of the injury or the defendant's central link and the product was available in that state through ordinary commercial channels. If none of these three provisions select the governing law, liability is determined in accordance with general tort rules (§ 6.10(2)). Issues relating to damages are determined "by the law selected under the rules for such damages or the general tort rules" (§ 6.10(3)).

QUESTIONS

What do you think of the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) scheme at this stage of its development? Is the distinction between conduct-regulating and loss-allocation rules sufficiently clear to warrant the Reporters' reliance on it in the construction of tort conflict rules? Note that at the October 2016 meeting, there was extensive discussion of this latter point, including a good bit of skepticism that the two kinds of rules can be clearly distinguished, at least at the margins, or that rules might be supported by both purposes. (There is also, of course, the ever-present problem of determining what policies support particular rules.) Are the Reporters wise to insert provisions (as in § 6.09(1)) allowing the injured party to select the applicable law after the occurrence of the tort? Is it wise, in § 6.09(2), to insert provisions encouraging choice of law in torts by mutual consent in contracts? Does this risk adding an unnecessarily complicated additional layer into the choice-of-law inquiry? (Reconsider this question after you have studied choice-of-law provisions in contracts in Chapter 5 of the casebook.) See generally Symeon C. Symeonides, The Third Conflicts Restatement's First Draft on Tort Conflicts, 92 TUL. L. REV. 1 (2017).

D. LEFLAR'S CHOICE-INFLUENCING CONSIDERATIONS

[Insert after Note 3 on page 345.]

4. In Shelby County Health Care Corp. v. Southern Farm Bureau Cas. Ins. Co., 855 F.3d 836 (8th Cir. 2017), the claim was for impairment of a medical lien by a Tennessee hospital. The decedent had been injured in Arkansas and treated at the hospital in Tennessee, but his estate was being administered in Arkansas. The administrator of the estate obtained a settlement from the tortfeasor's insurer, allocating the entire settlement to recovery for wrongful death and none to compensatory damages for medical services and other expenses. After the probate proceeding was closed, the hospital sued the settling parties for impairment of its lien. On a second appeal after remand for determination whether Arkansas or Tennessee law governed the issue, the court of appeals held that under Arkansas' conflicts approach, Tennessee law should govern. The court first characterized the issue as one in tort rather than contract. It then opined that under Arkansas conflicts doctrine the court should first determine the state of the most significant relationship and then apply Leflar's choice-influencing considerations to determine the applicable law. After counting contacts, the court never explicitly concluded that one state or the other had the most significant relationship, but simply said it "considered" that question along with Leflar's considerations. (Nevertheless, the implication of the court's opinion was that Tennessee had the most significant relationship.) With regard to the choice-influencing considerations, it held that the predictability of results factor favored Tennessee because forcing parties like the hospital to predict the state in which a decedent's estate would be administered would result in unpredictable results and the application of Tennessee law would prevent forum shopping in lien impairment actions involving former patients who lived. The maintenance of interstate and international order also favored the application of Tennessee law because application of Arkansas law would deprive the hospital of compensation for emergency care administered to injured Arkansans. The court did not mention the simplification of the judicial task consideration. It considered the fourth factor, advancement of the forum's governmental interest, to be prevention of creditor's from attaching liens to wrongful death recoveries. However, while the court said this arguably pointed to Arkansas law, this was only because Arkansas law allowed the administrator to allocate the entire recovery to wrongful death and none to recoveries that would benefit the creditors of the estate. In any event the court interpreted an Arkansas Court of Appeals decision as not having identified a strong policy in favor of the allocation procedure and then opined that it was not convinced that the forum's interest outweighed the other two factors, referring back to the interstate order factor as encouraging deference to other states' laws when they had a real interest in having their law applied. The court did not mention the better law factor. Thus, the court considered that Tennessee law, which allowed the claim, should be applied.

Evaluate the court's method of applying Leflar's system. What does addition of the most significant relationship inquiry add to the method, if anything? Did the fact that the court considered this as the first step analysis explain why it felt it necessary to categorize the case first as a tort case? Is it really hard to predict where a decedent's estate is going to be administered? Is it really true that Arkansas did not have a strong interest in its allocation procedure? Would that question have been clarified if the hospital had filed the lien in the Arkansas probate proceeding and litigated it in Arkansas state court?

E. OTHER APPROACHES

2. Eclectic Solutions: Combining Choice-of-Law Approaches

[Insert at the end of Note 4(f) on page 363.]

Sims v. Kia Motors of Am., Inc., 839 F.3d 393 (5th Cir. 2016) (products liability action commenced in California and transferred under 28 U.S.C. § 1404(a) to Texas, where accident occurred and automobile purchased; applying California comparative impairment approach, court of appeals held that Texas had an interest in applying its law to attract businesses like Kia to Texas and that even if California had an interest in applying its law, Texas' interest would be more impaired by not applying its law because conduct-regulating rules were involved and the place of the wrong had the predominant interest in such cases.

F. SPECIAL PROBLEMS: MASS TORTS

2. Class Actions

[Insert at the end of the carryover paragraph on page 376.]

See also Bobbitt v. Milberg LLP, 801 F.3d 1066 (9th Cir. 2015) (in action for malpractice arising out of previous class action, court holds that under Arizona choice of law principles, specifically § 145 of Second Restatement, place of injury factor, factor regarding where conduct causing injury took place, and factor regarding center of relationship between parties favored application of Arizona law, while factor regarding domicile of parties was entitled to little weight; therefore, lower court decision refusing to certify malpractice action as class action was vacated and remanded); Johnson v. Nextel Commc'ns, Inc., 780 F.3d 128 (2d Cir. 2015) (district court erred in certifying action for class treatment because proper choice of law analysis indicates that the law of each of the individual members of the class's home state will apply to their claims diminishing the predominance of common issues and superiority of class treatment factors for class treatment to the vanishing point); Grandalski v. Quest Diagnostics, Inc., 767 F.3d 175 (3d Cir. 2014) (in nationwide putative class action against medical testing for overbilling, district court did not err in engaging in choice of law inquiry and concluding that the law of each of the individual plaintiff's home states would apply to their claims; patients had not carried their burden of showing that grouping of state laws was workable and need for specific evidence from each patient was not compatible with class predominance requirement).

3. Choice of Law: The ALI Proposal

[Insert after Note 3 on page 377.]

4. In its project to draft a third restatement of conflict of laws, the American Law Institute will include a Topic 6 in Chapter 5 on Choice of Law dealing with Complex Litigation. See RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS, at xx xxi (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 1, Oct. 1, 2015) (Projected Table of Contents). The project is at this date in its early stages, and it is, therefore, not possible to determine what this Topic will look like. Presumably, however, the drafters will attempt to make their proposals compatible with the ALI's complex litigation project. If so, is this likely to produce a desirable product?

* * * * *

CHAPTER 5

CHOICE OF LAW: CONTRACTS

[Insert before Section A on page 379.]

The RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017) introduced a Chapter 8 on Contracts, Topic 1 (General Rules), §§ 8.01 – 8.10. The chapter has not yet been discussed at a meeting of the Advisers and Members Consultative Group or at an annual meeting of the ALI and is not yet fully developed. The provisions contained in Topic 1 will be discussed below as relevant.

A. TRADITIONAL APPROACHES

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 384.]

See also Berry & Berry Acquisitions, LLC v. BFN Props. LLC, 416 P.3d 1061 (Okla. 2018) (non-compete clause in contract containing choice-of-law clause specifying Texas law was applicable; Oklahoma a traditional state in contracts holds that parties are free to specify the applicable law in a contract as long as that law does not violate Oklahoma public policy; Texas law providing non-compete clause enforceable did not violate Oklahoma public policy).

B. SOME MODERN APPROACHES

1. When the Contract Does Not Contain a Choice-of-Law Clause

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 395.]

See also Hoosier v. Interinsurance Exchange of the Auto. Club, 451 S.W.3d 206 (Ark. 2014) (holding Texas law rather than California law applied to underinsured motorist provision because Texas, by virtue of the fact that at the time of the accident the place of performance was Texas, the insureds lived in Texas, the location of the subject matter of the contract was Texas; evaluating these factors according to their relative importance to the case (but without explaining why they were relatively more important than other factors), Texas had the most significant relationship to the issue).

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 402.]

See also Leritz v. Farmers Ins. Co., 385 P.3d 991 (Okla. 2016) (providing laws to apply to insurance contracts by state statute); Tidyman's Mgmt. Servs. Inc. v. Davis, 330 P.3d 1139 (Mont.

2014) (under Montana statute, Montana law applied to case because Montana was place of performance of contract; this is congruent with § 6 of the Second Restatement).

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 402.]

See also Certain Underwriters at Lloyds, London v. Chemtura Corp., 160 A.3d 457 (Del. 2017) (insured sued for declaratory judgment that insurer required to reimburse costs of cleaning up environmental contamination in Arkansas and Ohio; Supreme Court of Delaware held that presumption under Second Restatement § 193 that principal location of insured risk controls did not apply to complex multistate insurance agreement and most significant relationship test pointed to New York, which was principal place of business of insured at beginning of coverage, was state of most significant relationship).

[Insert after Note 3 on page 410 following Plante v. Columbia Paints excerpt.]

4. In American Fire & Casualty Co. v. Hegel, 847 F.3d 956 (8th Cir. 2017), an employer brought suit against an employee's estate, seeking a declaratory judgment that it had no obligation to provide underinsured motorist coverage under its business auto insurance policy after the employee had been killed during the course of his employment in an automobile accident. At issue was whether the law of Kentucky, which provided no such obligation, or the law of North Dakota, which did, applied. Applying Leflar's choice-influencing considerations, the court of appeals held that Kentucky law should be applied. The court found that predictability of results pointed in favor of the application of Kentucky law, because the insurance contract had been formed in Kentucky between the employer and a Kentucky agent. The rest of the factors were initially described as not relevant, but at the end of the discussion the court observed: "Accordingly, two factors favor the application of Kentucky law and no factor favors the application of North Dakota law." The second factor the court may have been counting in favor of Kentucky was the forum's governmental interest; however, the court's analysis of that factor concluded that North Dakota had no governmental interest because the case involved an out-of-state insurance company and an out-of-state resident. (Is that a plausible analysis?) On the simplification of the judicial task point, the court noted that Plante was distinguishable from the case before it because North Dakota had a statute requiring underinsured motorist coverage, making it unnecessary for the court to have to formulate the appropriate legal standard. The court also noted that the difficulty of applying North Dakota law is "a moot issue" because federal courts routinely apply the laws of the various states. Was this last observation a shot at the North Dakota Supreme Court's silly analysis of this factor in Plante? Finally, the court noted that even under North Dakota law, the deceased employee would not have been entitled to recover underinsured motorist benefits because the driver of the other automobile was not underinsured. Did this observation make the entire conflicts analysis unnecessary?

5. As stated at the beginning of this chapter in the supplement, the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017) contains a partial draft of Chapter 8 on Contracts, Topic 1 (General Rules).

(a) In § 8.01, the drafters state that contract issues can be resolved by "an effective choice of law" by the parties in accord with the rule of § 8.02, but in the absence of a choice-of-law clause, by the provisions of §§ 8.05 – 8.10. Section 8.05(1) states that in the absence of a choice-of-law clause, the governing law will be chosen by applicable presumptions found in §§ 8.06 – 8.10. Section 8.06 states that the presumptions established in §§ 8.07 – 8.10 govern choice-of-law decisions for contracts without a choice-of-law clause. The latter sections provide presumptions dealing with contracts where negotiation and performance are in the same state (§ 8.07), where making and performance are in the same state (§ 8.08), for service contracts (§ 8.09), and for insurance contracts (§ 8.10). (Note that the commentary contains discussion and illustrations indicating how the presumptions can be rebutted.) Section 8.05(2) provides a list of contacts “governing” the choice of law determination if no controlling presumption applies to a particular issue; the contacts “include” the place of performance of the contract, the place of negotiating the contract, the central links of each party, the place of the subject matter of the contract, and the place of executing or “otherwise making” the contract. Section 8.05(2) further admonishes that the contacts “shall be evaluated by reference to their relevance to the particular conflicting laws and the policies behind the conflicting laws,” and that the “state with the most directly relevant contact or contacts shall provide the governing law.” Section 8.05(3) purports then to describe how the strength and relevance of the “contacts and policies” should be considered in light of certain listed goals: promoting freedom of contract and transaction planning, giving effect to the parties’ justified expectations concerning applicable law, and protecting one party from another party’s unfair use of bargaining power.

(b) Does the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) draft contain enough provisions governing presumptions, or does predictability demand that more presumptions be created to deal with particular kinds of contracts or contract clauses? Are the general provisions of § 8.05 an improvement over the most significant relationship approach of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) § 188?

2. When the Contract Contains a Choice-of-Law Clause

[Insert at the end of Note 4(a) on page 430.]

See also Crawford Prof'l Drugs, Inc. v. CVS Caremark Corp., 748 F.3d 249 (5th Cir. 2014) (under § 187, plaintiff failed to demonstrate that Arizona had no substantial relationship to the parties or transaction; assuming arguendo that Mississippi has a materially greater interest than Arizona in the determination of the particular issue and that Mississippi would be the state of the applicable law in the absence of the choice of law clause, the application of Arizona law would not violate a fundamental policy of Mississippi; though each state has a different law, they would not necessarily reach different results on the enforceability of the arbitration clause at issue); Progressive Gulf Ins. Co. v. Faehrich, 327 P.3d 1061 (Nev. 2014) (Nevada public policy does not invalidate the choice of Mississippi law in an insurance contract even though family exclusion clause in contract would deny recovery; more fundamentally, Nevada’s public policy has changed and now permits family exclusion clauses); Exxon Mobile Corp. v. Drennen, 452 S.W.3d 139 (Tex. 2014) (choice of law clause selecting New York law to govern executive bonus-compensation system that allowed forfeiture of bonus awards for “detrimental activity” was valid; Texas was the state of the most significant relationship and also had a materially greater interest than New York, but application of New York law would not violate a fundamental policy of Texas because the provision in question was not a covenant not to compete; reserved for another day is whether such provisions are unreasonable restraints of trade under Texas law and unenforceable for that reason); cf. Bode & Grenier, LLP v. Knight, 808 F.3d 852 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (one contract document did not refer to or incorporate choice of law clause in another contract document; therefore, it was not governed by the choice of law clause); Masters Grp. Int'l, Inc. v. Comerica Bank, 352 P.3d 1101 (Mont. 2014) (while refusing to adopt a “bright-line” rule with respect to all choice of law provisions, court holds that tort issues in case are governed by the law selected by the provision as well as contract provisions, resulting in the application of Michigan law to tort claims “arising out of contract”).

[Insert at the end of Note 6 on page 432.]

See also St. Jude Med. S.C., Inc. v. Biosense Webster, Inc., 818 F.3d 785 (8th Cir. 2016) (choice-of-law clause in non-competition agreement upheld under law of Minnesota, which is a “better law” jurisdiction, but court’s analysis simply stated that Minnesota’s approach was to uphold choice-of-law provisions as long as the parties acted in good faith and without intent to evade the law); Federated Capital Corp. v. Libby, 384 P.3d 221 (Utah 2016) (choice-of-law clause and forum selection clause in contract pointed to Utah; action in Utah held barred by limitations because of Utah borrowing statute, which selected Pennsylvania’s shorter limitations period as applicable; argument that forum selection clause made Utah longer limitations period applicable without regard to borrowing statute rejected). Cf. George K. Baum & Co. v. Twin City Fire Ins. Co., 760 F.3d 795 (8th Cir. 2014) (a contract can indicate which state’s law the parties intended to apply without an explicit choice of law clause); Shanghai Commercial Bank Ltd. v. Chang, 404 P.3d 62 (Wash. 2017) (choice-of-law clause in agreement adopted Hong Kong law for “enforcement” of agreement and therefore governed action to enforce Hong Kong judgment awarded for default on debt obligation; Hong Kong was place of most significant relationship and application of Hong Kong law did not violate Washington’s public policy). Cf. HSBC Bank USA v. Anderson, 406 P.3d 416 (Mont. 2017) (Montana law governed underlying foreclosure on property located in Montana, but New York Law governed debtor’s defenses and counterclaims under choice-of-law clause in loan documents); Candee v. Candee, 903 N.W.2d 514 (N.D. 2017) (general conflict-of-law analysis not referring to any conflicts system upholding choice-of-law clause in agreement selecting California law as applicable to foreclosure on both California and North Dakota property and thus precluding deficiency judgment).

[Insert after Problem 5.5 on page 434.]

NOTE ON RESTATEMENT (THIRD) AND CHOICE-OF-LAW CLAUSES

As explained in subsection B.1., above, the RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017), contains a new Chapter 8, Topic 1 (General Rules). Section 8.01 provides that parties can resolve choice-of-law questions with a choice of law clause in a contract in accord with the rule of § 8.02. Sections 8.02 – 8.04, will deal respectively with enforceability of choice-of-law clauses, interpretation of choice-of-law clauses, and guidance about how to deal with choice-of-law clauses when a state provides that its internal law must be applied to certain transactions, does not apply to certain transactions, or that parties may select its internal law for certain transactions. However, at this writing, these latter sections have no black letter content.

C. SOME SPECIAL PROBLEMS

2. The Uniform Commercial Code

[Insert at the end of Note 2(b) on page 447.]

See also Mo Zhang, Rethinking Contractual Choice of Law: An Analysis of Relation Syndrome, 44 STETSON L. REV. 831 (2015).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 448.]

See also W. Laurence Craig, Some Trends and Developments in the Laws and Practice of International Commercial Arbitration, 50 TEX. INT'L L.J. 699 (2016); Tanya J. Monestier, Forum Selection Clauses and Consumer Contracts in Canada, 36 B.U. INT'L L.J. 177 (2018).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 6

CHOICE OF LAW: PROPERTY, TRUSTS, AND ESTATES

[Insert prior to Section A on page 450.]

In RESTATEMENT OF THE LAW (THIRD) CONFLICT OF LAWS (Preliminary Draft No. 2, Aug. 12, 2016), the Reporters included a Chapter 7, §§ 7.01 – 7.26, dealing with property. At the October meeting of the Reporters, Advisers, and Members Consultative Group, the discussion of this chapter was somewhat truncated because of lack of time. Based on that truncated discussion, however, it seems likely that portions of the Chapter will undergo substantial revision. For example, in the real property sections, the Reporters included numerous black-letter rules that pointed to the situs of the real property as controlling, but these rules were qualified by an escape clause that stated “unless, under the exceptional circumstances of a particular case, a different state’s law is manifestly more appropriate.” In the discussion, it was pointed out that in some sections, it was inconceivable that any law but the situs should control the issue, and the escape clause posed a danger that the courts would interpret the section as an invitation to depart from situs law improperly. In other sections, the initial designation of situs law as controlling was itself criticized on the grounds that there were numerous situations in which the situs had no conceivable interest in having its law applied, as where a non-resident testator leaves realty to non-resident beneficiaries contrary to situs law and there are no potential inheritors of the property located in the situs state or other legitimate interests of that state in controlling the disposition of the land by will. Because it seems that this chapter will undergo significant revision in the future, therefore, there is no detailed description of the individual sections in this supplement. The following is a listing of the individual sections with the subject-matter of the section described. The curious may refer to the draft for more detail on the current version.

Section 7.01 (real property defined); § 7.02 (personal property defined); § 7.03 (fixtures defined); § 7.04 (characterization of property as real or personal determined by law of situs state); § 7.05 (equitable conversion of real into personal property determined by law of situs); § 7.06 (permissible types of interests in realty determined by situs law); § 7.07 (whether rule against perpetuities violated decided by situs law); § 7.08 (restrictions on alienation of realty determined by law of state where realty located); § 7.09 (claim for waste affecting realty governed by situs law); § 7.10 (leasehold interests in realty governed by situs law unless situs allows issue to be governed by contract); § 7.11 (security interests in realty governed by situs law unless situs law allows issue to be governed by contract); § 7.12 (trusts of realty); § 7.13 (marital property); § 7.14 (contracts to transfer interests in realty); § 7.15 (transfer of realty by deed); § 7.16 (recording of real property documents); § 7.17 (fraud in connection with a transfer by deed); § 7.18 (transfer of interests in real property by will); § 7.18 (transfer of realty by intestate succession); § 7.20 (transfer of real property by power of appointment by trust); § 7.21 (transfer of realty by escheat); § 7.22 (transfer interest in real property by adverse possession); § 7.23 (easements, covenants, and other servitudes pertaining to real property); § 7.24 (private nuisance affecting realty); § 7.25 (trespass); § 7.26 (state regulation of real property).

The RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF CONFLICTS OF LAW (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Oct. 3, 2017), contains a revision of Chapter 7 (Property), Topic 1 (§§ 7.01 – 7.07) (Core Real Property Issues) and Topic 2 (§§ 7.08 – 7.13) (Property Transactions). The following is a brief description of the revised sections.

Section 7.01 (Interests in Real Property) provides that the law of the situs governs the permissible types of interests in land, whether an interest in land violates the rule against perpetuities, and the validity of a restraint on alienation of an interest in land.

Section 7.02 (Transfer of Interests in Real Property by Adverse Possession) provides that situs law governs the transfer of an interest in land by adverse possession and the nature of the interest transferred.

Section 7.03 (Transfer of Real-Property Interest by Deed) provides that situs law governs the validity and effect of a transfer of an interest in land by deed and the nature of the interest transferred, as well as the construction of the deed unless the deed contains a choice-of-law clause designating the law of another state to govern construction.

Section 7.04 (Recording and Priorities of Real Property Interests) provides that situs law governs the recording of real-property documents and the effect of recording or failing to record such documents on the priorities of interests in the realty.

Section 7.05 (Servitudes) provides that the law of the situs governs servitudes (such as easements) on land.

Section 7.06 (Equitable Conversion of Real Property into Personal Property) provides that whether an interest in land is equitably converted into personalty by dealings with the land is determined by situs law.

Section 7.07 (Real-Property-Related Torts) provides that situs law governs claims for private nuisance, trespass on the land, and waste.

Section 7.08 (Contracts for the Sale of Property Interests) provides that contracts for the sale of land are governed by the law of the state indicated by the Restatement's choice-of-law rules.

Section 7.09 (Personal Property Leases) provides that a personal property lease is governed by the law of the state that governs the parties' lease agreement under the Restatement's contract choice-of-law rules.

Section 7.10 (Real Property Leases) provides that a real property lease is governed by the law chosen by the parties under the Restatement's contract choice-of-law provisions, "subject to the mandatory law of the state" where the leased land is situated.

Section 7.11 (Security Interests in Personal Property) provides that the attachment of a security interest in personal property, as well as the interest's validity and effect between the grantor of the interest and the secured party, are governed either by the law chosen by the parties "to the extent that the choice is effective under this Restatement's contract choice-of-law rules," or, in the absence of an effective choice-of-law clause, by the law of the state where the personal property was located at the time that the security interest attached if the property is tangible personalty, or by the law of the grantor's central link if the property is intangible. The section also provides that while the grantor's central link is in a state, that state's law will usually govern perfection of a security interest, the effect of perfection on the effectiveness of the security interest against third parties, and the priority of a security interest. In addition, the section provides that the enforcement of a security interest in personalty is governed by the law chosen by the grantor and secured party under the Restatement's contract choice-of-law rules or, in the absence of a choice-of-law clause, by the law of the state where the property is located at the time enforcement is commenced if the property is tangible or the law of the state of the grantor's central link if the property is intangible.

Section 7.12 (Security Interests in Real Property) provides that a real property security interest is governed by the law chosen by the parties in the security agreement under the Restatement's contract choice-of-law rules "subject to the mandatory law of the situs state," or in the absence of an effective choice-of-law clause, by the law of the situs (§ 7.12(2)(a) & (b)). Subject to those provisions, (in § 7.12(a) & (b)), the section provides that the law of the situs governs whether a security interest has been created in the land and the rights and obligations between the grantor (or mortgagor) and the secured party (or mortgagee) arising from the interest, as well as the (i) effectiveness of the security interest against third parties and the priority of the interest relative to other interests in the land and (ii) the enforcement of the interest.

Section 7.13 (Gifts of Property by Living Donor) provides that the requirements for a valid gift of an interest in property by a living donor are determined by the law of the state of the donor's central link at the time the gift is putatively made. However, as to a gift of land, the law of the situs governs whether the gift must be evidenced by a writing, the required formalities of the writing, whether the writing must be recorded, and the effect of recording or failing to record the writing. In addition, the law of the state indicated by Topic 3 of the Chapter (which does not appear in the preliminary draft) will govern whether one spouse or one member of another type of legally recognized relationship may make a gift of an interest in property without the consent of the other.

Topic 3 will govern marital property; Topic 4 will govern trusts; and Topic 5 will govern wills and intestate succession. At this writing, these topics have not been drafted.

A. LAND

[Insert at the end of Note 1(b) on page 456.]

Compare Estate of Hannan, with Molina-Ray v. King, ___ S.E.2d ___, 2017 WL 4171658 (Va. 2017) (trust of land located in Virginia contained choice-of-law clause pointing to Texas law for construction of trust; held that situs rule only governs in the absence of choice-of-law clause selecting applicable law for construction).

[Insert after Note 1(c) on page 456.]

(d) In Ward v. Hahn, 400 P.3d 669 (Kan. Ct. App. 2017), a Nebraska court in a divorce action equitably divided the marital property and awarded an interest in the husband's Kansas land to the wife, the decree directly assigning the Kansas land to the wife. In a Kansas proceeding to enforce this judgment, a Kansas district court upheld this and ordered the decree recorded in the land records in Kansas in order to "effectuate the transfer of the . . . real estate" to the wife. The court acknowledged that the Nebraska court did not have subject-matter jurisdiction to directly decree the title out of the husband into the wife, but enforced the decree anyway on grounds of "comity," finding that nothing in Kansas public policy forbade this. The Kansas Court of Appeals disagreed. The court held that Nebraska could not directly (as opposed to indirectly) transfer the land to the wife unless Kansas law permitted it. On the issue of comity, the court held that Kansas generally recognizes the rights on which other states' divorce decrees are based and that this included the right of the divorcing parties to a just and equitable division of the marital property. However, this did not extend to a “right of a divorcing party to have the district court in one state directly transfer title to real estate in another state,” which violated the public policy of Kansas. Thus, although the equitable division and ultimate award of the property to the wife did not violate any public policy of Kansas, the direct transfer of title did and rendered the Nebraska decree unenforceable! Given that the wife brought a separate proceeding in Kansas to enforce the Nebraska decree and that the Kansas as well as the Nebraska judgments could have been recorded in the land records of Kansas, what practical problems of any sort would have been caused for the state of Kansas or Kansas residents by the Kansas district court’s action? On remand to the Kansas district court, can the court (1) separate that part of the Nebraska judgment making the award of the land from that part directly decreeing the title to the wife; (2) hold that the equitable division, as opposed to the direct transfer is valid and issue preclusive; and (3) enter its own decree giving the land to the wife? If so, what has the Kansas Court of Appeals accomplished by its action except to produce a colossal waste of time? If not, does the question of the proper equitable division of the property have to be adjudicated all over again (1) in Kansas or (2) in Nebraska? For additional discussion of Ward, see Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 77 – 78. (2018).

[Insert at the end of the Questions on page 474.]

See also In re Miller, 853 F.3d 508 (9th Cir. 2017) (bankruptcy dispute in which federal choice-of-law doctrine in the form of the Second Restatement applied; husband borrowed money from California bank and signed a guaranty in his individual capacity; loan contract and guaranty had choice-of-law clauses selecting California law as applicable; upon default, California bank sued husband and wife in California federal action, but obtained judgment only against husband; bank recorded judgment lien in California where husband and wife owned an apartment; husband then applied for bankruptcy; under Arizona law, the apartment qualified as community property and judgment lien not enforceable against it; under California law, apartment was not community, but tenancy in common, and lien would be enforceable against husband’s portion of property; court applies Second Restatement § 230 to the effect that whether a lien creates an interest in land and the nature of the interest are determined “by the law that would be applied by the courts of the situs”; applying California’s comparative impairment approach to conflicts, the court selected California rather than Arizona law as applicable because California had a significant creditor-protection interest that outweighed Arizona’s family income protection interest and Arizona law would completely defeat California’s interest because the creditor would be left completely without a remedy, but California’s law would not entirely defeat Arizona’s interest because lien would only be protected against husband’s share of the property).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 7

FAMILY LAW

A. MARRIAGE AND ITS TERMINATION

1. Marriage

[Substitute the following text for Note 3(a) – (e) and (f) on pages 513 – 516.]

After the principal text had gone to press, the United States Supreme Court decided Obergefell v. Hodges, 576 U.S. ___, 135 S. Ct. 2584 (2015). In Obergefell, the Court held that state limitations on same-sex marriage were unconstitutional under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. Obviously, if the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses prohibit a state from refusing to allow same-sex marriages under its own law, those clauses also prohibit the states from refusing to recognize marriages performed in other states simply on the grounds that they are between persons of the same sex. In fact, the Court, while not ruling directly on DOMA or the Full Faith and Credit issues discussed in the casebook, did hold “that there is no lawful basis for a State to refuse to recognize a lawful same-sex marriage performed in another State on the ground of its same-sex character.” Id. at 2608.

At this time, it is not clear what effect Obergefell will have on other nontraditional forms of marriage, such as polygamous or polyamorous marriages, incestuous marriages, and marriage between persons below a certain age. The Court’s opinion indicated that marriage was a fundamental right protected by the Constitution, that there was no difference between same-sex and opposite-sex couples with regard to the right, and that laws prohibiting same-sex marriages stigmatized same-sex couples in an unconstitutional fashion. The new problems below explore some of these issues.

For an argument about how the Full Faith and Credit Clause might be useful for “the marriage controversies of the future,” see Rebecca Aviel, Faithful Unions, 69 HASTINGS L.J. 721 (2018).

[Substitute the following problems for Problems 7-1 – 7-3 in the casebook.]

Problem 7-1. State X forbids polygamous marriages. S-1, S-2, and S-3 are domiciled in State X and wish to enter into a polygamous marriage with one another. They travel to State Y, which has recently legalized polygamous marriages and validly enter into a polygamous marriage under the law of State Y. They then return to State X and resume their life in that state. Subsequently, S-1 dies intestate while the parties are still domiciled in State X. S-2 and S-3 claim all of S-1’s property as the surviving spouses of S-1. Their claim is challenged in the probate proceeding in State X by S-1’s surviving brothers and sisters, who would inherit S-1’s estate if S-1 is not validly married. In response, S-2 and S-3 assert that State X must treat the State Y marriage as valid and recognize it under the Full Faith and Credit Clause of the Constitution. Consider first Obergefell, discussed in the text above. Should the right to marry more than one person be considered “fundamental” in the same fashion as same-sex marriages, thus bringing the marriage described in this problem within the reach of the decision? How can you tell? Assume that Obergefell does not encompass polygamous marriages, so that the states can allow or disallow such marriages as they please. Under such circumstances, given the Full Faith and Credit Clause, could State X deny effect to the marriage validly performed under the law of State Y on the grounds that polygamous marriages violate its strong public policy? (Remember that DOMA is not applicable to this case.) Could it do so if it adds explicitly that the parties were attempting to avoid otherwise legitimate restrictions on their ability to marry by going to State Y to evade the State X restrictions on polygamous marriages?

Problem 7-2. On the facts of Problem 7-1, assume that there are only two parties to the marriage, S-1 and S-2, but that the parties are first cousins. State X, where the parties are domiciled, forbids marriages between first cousins, but State Y, where the marriage was performed, allows such marriages. Now does the Full Faith and Credit Clause require State X to recognize the State Y marriage as against a strong public policy objection? Suppose S-1 and S-2 were brother and sister? Suppose they were first cousins, but were of the same sex?

Problem 7-3. Assume that S-1, S-2, and S-3 are domiciled in State X, which permits polygamous marriages and the parties enter into such a marriage. Subsequently, D, a citizen of State Y, enters State X, and, while present there, becomes involved in an altercation with S-1 and kills S-1. S-2 and S-3 qualify as co-administrators of S-1’s estate and bring a wrongful death action against D in State X, validly serving D in State Y under the State X long-arm statute, which extends as far as the United States Constitution permits. (You may assume that the assertion of long-arm jurisdiction over D is constitutionally valid.) D does not appear in the State X action, and a default judgment for substantial damages is rendered against D. Subsequently, S-1 and S-2 bring an action in State Y to enforce the judgment against D. D defends on the grounds that the strong public policy of State Y prohibits enforcement of a judgment in favor of persons involved in a polygamous marriage. Note that DOMA has no application here. Thus, the judgment is governed by the general implementing statute to the Full Faith and Credit Clause, 28 U.S.C. § 1738 and the exceptions to that statute. The statute and its exceptions are examined in Chapter 9. Reexamine this problem after studying the materials in that chapter. Then assume that State X is a foreign country and State Y is a state of the United States, with all other facts remaining the same. What should the result be then and why?

2. Divorce

[Insert at the end of 5(a) on page 528.]

For a discussion of a lower Alabama state court case granting a divorce in disregard of the restrictions of a Louisiana covenant marriage, see Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2015: Twenty-Ninth Annual Survey, 64 AM. J. COMP. L. 221, 294 – 96 (2016).

[Substitute the following problem for Problem 7-5 on page 529.]

Problem 7-5. S-1 and S-2 are first cousins domiciled in State X, which permits marriages between first cousins. They enter into a valid marriage in State X. Subsequently, S-1 moves to State Y, which does not recognize the validity of marriages between first cousins and has specifically prohibited recognition of any such marriages performed in other states. S-1 establishes a new domicile there and sues S-2 for a divorce in a State Y court of proper subject-matter jurisdiction, serving S-2 under the State Y long arm statute, which extends the jurisdiction of the State Y courts as far as the U.S. Constitution permits. Assuming that S-2 appears in the State Y action, what arguments can S-2 make that the State Y court should not grant the divorce to S-1? What arguments can S-1 make to the contrary?

3. Annulment

[Insert after Note 3 on page 532.]

4. In In re Geraghty, 150 A.3d. 386 (N.H. 2016), the parties were married in New York in 1981, moved successively to Massachusetts and New Jersey, and finally moved to New Hampshire by 2002. In 2013, the wife filed a petition for divorce, and in 2015 the husband filed a petition for annulment, arguing that New York law should be applied and contending that the marriage was void from the inception because of fraud, the wife having allegedly concealed that she had engaged in prostitution, taken illegal drugs, and had certain medical procedures prior to the marriage. The trial court entered a judgment of divorce, holding in part that New Hampshire law should govern the annulment issue and did not provide for annulment under the circumstances. The New Hampshire Supreme Court applied Professor Leflar's choice-influencing considerations, holding that predictability of results favored application of New York law, maintenance of reasonable orderliness among the states was neutral (because both states had a substantial connection to the facts of the case), simplification of the judicial task was not important (because New Hampshire could easily apply New York annulment law), advancement of the forum's governmental interest favored application of New Hampshire law (because of New Hampshire's strong interest in maintaining order in its system of regulating marriage and marital dissolutions), and that the preference for applying the sounder rule of law applied to New Hampshire's stricter rule of annulment. Thus, the court affirmed the trial court's application of New Hampshire's annulment law. Note that after evaluating all of the five choice-influencing considerations, the court simply stated: "Accordingly, our analysis of the five choice-influencing considerations leads us to conclude that the trial court correctly applied New Hampshire law to the respondent's petition for annulment of the marriage." It did not indicate which of the applicable considerations, if any, was stronger than the others. Was the result simply due to the fact that, in the court's view, two of the considerations pointed to New Hampshire law and only one to New York law? If so, is this the way you understand that Leflar's considerations should be applied? Did the court analyze the choice-influencing considerations the way you understand is proper under Leflar's system?

[Substitute the following problems for Problems 7.6 and 7.7 on page 532.]

Problem 7.6. S-1 and S-2 are first cousins who are domiciliaries of State X, which, as a matter of its strong public policy, prohibits marriages between first cousins or recognition of such marriages performed in other states where they would be valid. S-1 and S-2 travel to State Y, where marriages between first cousins are legal, and are validly married there under the law of State Y. They then return to State X to live. Subsequently, S-1 abandons S-2 and commences an action to annul the marriage in a court of State X. Assuming that State X follows the approach of the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF CONFLICT OF LAWS, described in Note 1 of the casebook, should it annul the marriage? Would it matter if the parties were same-sex first cousins, with all the remaining facts the same.

Problem 7.7. Assume the same facts as Problem 7.6, except that after S-1 abandons S-2, S-1 moves to State Z and establishes a new domicile there. State Z, like State X, also considers marriages between first cousins as contrary to its strong public policy and follows the approach of the Second Restatement. Would State Z have jurisdiction to annul the marriage?

B. SUPPORT: DECREES/ORDERS

1. “Divisible Divorce”

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 536.]

For a recent decision applying the in rem classification to support divorce jurisdiction based on the plaintiff’s domicile in the forum, but employing the in personam classification to deny personal jurisdiction on claims of custody, parenting time, support and division of property over a defendant who had no contacts with the forum, see Metzler v. Metzler, ___ N.W.2d ___, 25 Neb. App. 757 (Neb. Ct. App. 2018).

[Substitute the following problems for Problems 7.8 and 7.9 on page 538.]

Problem 7.8. S-1, S-2, and S-3 are domiciled in State X and married to each other under the law of that state, which permits polygamous marriages. S-1 abandons S-2 and S-3 and moves to State Y, which also recognizes the validity of polygamous marriages. When S-1 abandons S-2 and S-3, the latter parties move to State Z, which by its constitution, prohibits polygamous marriages or the recognition of polygamous marriages performed in other states. S-1 obtains an ex parte divorce in State Y based on S-1’s newly acquired domicile there. While S-1 was temporarily in State Z, S-2 and S-3 have S-1 served with process in an action to recover alimony under the law of State X, the state of the parties’ previous domicile. (Assume that State X would provide that the right of S-2 and S-3 to obtain alimony survived the State Y ex parte divorce decree.) S-2 and S-3 contends that the Full Faith and Credit Clause requires that State Z apply the law of State X and award alimony under that law. S-1 contends that the Full Faith and Credit Clause contains no such requirement and that State Z can refuse to recognize the validity of the polygamous marriage between the parties and deny alimony under its strong public policy. What should the result be and why?

Problem 7.9. On the facts of Problem 7.8, could S-2 and S-3 successfully sue in State X for alimony after they have changed domiciles to State Z? Review this problem after studying the materials in Chapter 10.

2. Support—Generally

c. Uniform Interstate Family Support Act

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 545.]

See also Studer v. Studer, 131 A.3d 240 (Conn. 2016) (“initial order” issued in Florida and provided for the duration of the support obligation; order registered in Connecticut, where order modified twice to adjust amount of support; third modification sought to extend duration of support beyond period specified in initial order; court held that under the UIFSA, law of Florida where initial order issued controlled whether modification permitted).

[Insert after Note 3 on page 552.]

(a) In In re Paternity of M.H., 383 P.3d 1031 (Wash. 2016), the question was whether § 604(b) of the UIFSA, which provides for application of the procedural law of the responding state shall govern enforcement procedure and remedies or whether § 604(c) providing for the application of the longer statute of limitations of either the issuing or responding state applied to an Indiana judgment being enforced in Washington. Washington had a statute providing that a judgment for “accrued child support” would continue in force for ten years after the eighteenth birthday of the child, who was now 29. Thus, the judgment would no longer be in force under Washington law, but would still be in effect under Indiana law, which had a 20-year statute of limitations that had not yet run. The Washington Supreme Court held that § 604(c) applied, thus making Indiana law applicable and the judgment enforceable.

C. CUSTODY

1. The Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Enforcement Act

[Insert after Note 4 on page 558.]

5. In Friedetzky v. Hsia, 117 A.3d 660 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2015), a mother commenced a single-parent custody petition for her child. The putative father filed an answer requesting paternity testing of the child and initiated discovery to acquire information relevant to paternity and child support. The mother amended her complaint to include claims for paternity, child support, and attorney fees. The father then moved to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction. The trial court granted the father’s motion, but the Maryland Court of Special Appeals held that by requesting paternity testing in his answer and requesting discovery, the father had waived his limited immunity under the UCCJEA that allows a nonresident to appear on an issue of interstate custody without submitting to the jurisdiction of the court in other matters.

3. International Child Abduction

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 574.]

See also Didon v. Castillo, 838F.3d 313 (3d Cir. 2016) (children resided on island of Saint Martin, which is divided into two countries, French Saint Martin, which recognizes the Hague Convention, and Dutch Sint Martin, which does not; court of appeals reversed district court's holding that the Convention permitted children to have two places of habitual residence at a single time and holding that the children were habitually resident in Dutch Sint Martin, which made the Convention inapplicable).

4. Adoption

[Insert after Note 2 on page 577.]

2.A(i) In V.L. v. E.L., 577 U.S. ___, 136 S. Ct. 1017 (2016), the Supreme Court confirmed that the same rules apply to adoption judgments of other states that apply generally to other kinds of judgments—i.e., that jurisdictionally valid adoption judgments of states must be given effect in other states. The case involved two women living in Alabama who were in a relationship from 1995 to 2011. One of the women conceived by artificial insemination. The parties wanted the non-conceiving partner to adopt the child, but this could not be done in Alabama. They rented a house in Georgia and instituted an adoption proceeding in a court there with proper subject-matter jurisdiction over adoption proceedings. Although Georgia law did not allow adoption unless the natural mother relinquished in writing all rights to the child, this was not done; but the mother of the child did consent to the adoption, and a judgment of adoption was entered by the Georgia court. Later, the partners broke up, and the natural mother denied the adopting partner custody and visitation rights. The latter partner instituted an action in Alabama state court to register the Georgia judgment and secure custody and visitation privileges. The Alabama Supreme Court ultimately determined that the provision in Georgia law prohibiting adoption unless the natural mother relinquished all rights to the child was a subject-matter jurisdiction restriction that made the Georgia judgment unenforceable in Alabama. In a per curiam opinion, the Supreme Court reversed. The Court found no basis in Georgia law for concluding that the provision in question was a subject-matter jurisdiction limitation as opposed to a provision governing the merits of adoption. The Court made it clear that under these circumstances the Full Faith and Credit Clause required the Alabama courts to give effect to the Georgia judgment.

(ii) Under the suppositions of the case, the result was clearly correct, as you will see when you study Chapter 9 on Judgments. However, as you will also see in that chapter, the rules governing the obligations of the states to give effect to the judgments of other states do not proceed directly from the Constitution, but from the general implementing statute, 28 U.S.C. § 1738, which also governs adoption judgments. In V.L., the Supreme Court never mentioned the implementing statute, but only the Full Faith and Credit Clause itself. It is commonplace for the Court to proceed this way, sometimes relying on the statute and sometimes relying on the Constitution, without explaining why it is doing one thing rather than another. After studying Chapter 10, ask yourself whether the Court should not try to explain how it sees the relationship between the statute and the first sentence of the Full Faith and Credit Clause.

(iii) The preceding paragraph stated that “under the suppositions of the case” the result was correct. As you will see in Chapter 10, there are more “exceptions” to the obligations of the states to give effect to judgments of other states than subject-matter jurisdiction. It pretty clearly appears from the lower court decisions that the parties to the Georgia proceeding had established a bogus address in Georgia so that they could invoke the authority of the Georgia courts in the adoption proceeding. In addition, that proceeding was not an adversarial proceeding. After studying Chapter 10, ask yourself whether there were any better grounds than subject-matter jurisdiction for arguing that Alabama did not have to give effect to the Georgia judgment.

[Add the following new material to the insert after Note 2 on page 577:]

2B.(i) In Burnett v. Maddocks, 881 N.W.2d 185 (Neb. 2016), Burnett brought an action to quiet title to a parcel of Nebraska land which he contended he had inherited as the “eldest son” of the life estate holder of the land under a will of the life estate’s great uncle. His claim was based on a Colorado decree of adult adoption making him the life estate holder’s heir for purposes of intestate distribution of the property. However, under Colorado law, the adult adoption decree did not create a parent-child relationship between the adopter and adoptee except to make the adoptee eligible for intestate distribution. Under Nebraska law, an adult adoptee is treated as the adopter’s child for all purposes. The Nebraska Supreme Court held that the Full Faith and Credit Clause required Nebraska to give the same effect to the Colorado decree as it would receive in Colorado, but because it did not create a parent-child relationship, the adoptee could not qualify as the “eldest son” of the adopter for purposes of the great-uncle’s will.

(ii) In In re Adoption of Jaelyn B., 883 N.W.2d 22 (Neb. 2016), a putative father executed an affidavit of paternity in Ohio. Subsequently, the mother moved to Nebraska and turned custody of the child over to a putative adoptive parent, who instituted an adoption proceeding in which a DNA test established that the putative father was not, in fact, the real father. The trial court denied the putative father’s motion to intervene on the grounds that his consent was not necessary to the adoption. The Nebraska Supreme Court held that the Full Faith and Credit Clause required Nebraska to give effect to the adoption decrees of other states, and a Nebraska statute extended the full faith and credit requirement to voluntary acknowledgements executed under the laws of other states. This meant that the putative father was the legal father under Ohio law, which had to be given full faith and credit by Nebraska, making the lower court’s action erroneous. See also Jesse B. v. Tylee H., 883 N.W.2d 1 (Neb. 2016) (same case).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 578.]

See also David Rohlfing, Note, Full Faith and Credit and Section 1983, 75 U. PITT. L. REV. 121 (2013).

[Insert after Note 7 on age 580.]

8. In Nevares v. M.L.S., 345 P.3d 719 (Utah 2015), a putative father commenced in Utah a paternity proceeding in Utah regarding a child conceived in Colorado, after the mother put the child up for adoption. The trial court applied Utah law and held that the father had failed to preserve his rights to object to the adoption under that law. The district court granted summary judgment for the mother, but the Utah Supreme Court reversed. The court held that the father had not failed to avail himself of opportunities under Colorado law to establish his parental rights, which would have disentitled him to object to the Utah adoption if it had been the case. The court then considered the applicability of a provision of Utah law that would bar the father from contesting the adoption if the child had been conceived in Colorado by conduct that would constitute a sexual offense under certain portions of Utah law. The court held that this provision was inapplicable and would present serious due process issues if applicable. On the latter point, the court stated that the father could not reasonably anticipate the application of Utah law to penalize him on the basis of sexual activity in Colorado.

[Substitute the following problem for Problem 7.14.]

Problem 7.14. S-1 and S-2 are unmarried domestic partners domiciled in State X. While domiciled in State X, S-1 and S-2 each adopt child C in a proper court proceeding in State X. The adoption is valid under State X law, which permits the adoption of a child by two unmarried adults. S-1 and S-2 later move to State Y, which prohibits by statute the adoption of child by more than one unmarried adult. Subsequently, S-1 and S-2 die simultaneously in an automobile accident. Tragically, they die intestate. In a probate proceeding to distribute the estate of S-1, S-1's brother claims the entirety of the estate. Under the intestate law of State Y, if C is the validly adopted child of S-1 and S-2, C would inherit the entirety of S-1's estate. However, if the adoption is invalid, S-1's brother would inherit the estate. Who should win and why?

D. MARITAL PROPERTY

1. Common Law and Community Property Regimes

[Insert after Note 2 on page 590.]

2(a). In Kirilenko v. Kirilenko, 505 S.W.3d 766 (Ky. 2016), the wife filed a petition for divorce and the trial court entered a judgment dissolving the marriage, ruling that the husband's disability benefits from the Connecticut retirement system were marital property subject to equitable distribution. The intermediate court of appeals held that Connecticut law governed the equitable distribution issue, but the Kentucky Supreme Court reversed, holding that Kentucky law governed the issue as the state of the marital domicile. The court recognized that Kentucky follows the Second Restatement in contracts and torts, but refused to do so in this kind of case. The court was influenced by the fact that application of any law other than the law of the marital domicile would pose "immense practical problems," in that equitable distribution law is "by any standard complex and difficult to apply" and "[j]udges in many states have had difficulty construing their own law correctly, let alone understanding the law of other jurisdictions.” In addition, the court observed that application of foreign law to individual assets acquired out of state would also lead to unjust results, as property division systems cannot be viewed in isolation and are an integral part of each state’s domestic law, which presents complex tradeoffs between property division and other issues.

2. Party Autonomy in Marital Property Arrangements

a. Unilateral Party Autonomy

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 592.]

See also Ministers & Missionaries Benefit Bd. v. Snow, 814 F.3d 130 (2d Cir. 2016) (answer to certified question by New York Court of Appeals; choice-of-law clause in retirement and death benefit plan controlled and compelled application of New York law rather than law of the place of the decedent’s domicile as provided under a New York statute); see Ministers & Missionaries Benefit Bd. v. Snow, 45 N.E.3d 917 (N.Y. 2015).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 592.]

See also Lazar v. Kroncke, 862 F.3d 1186 (9th Cir. 2017) (IRA contained choice-of-law provision selecting California law; wife designated as beneficiary under IRA, but parties then divorced and husband did not change beneficiary designation before he died; Arizona revocation on divorce (ROD) statute provided for automatic revocation of beneficiary designation, but California law provided a rebuttable presumption that divorce revokes beneficiary designation; applying Arizona statute that “deviated from” Second Restatement § 187’s approach, the court holds that the Arizona ROD statute trumped the choice-of-law provision in the IRA), pet. for cert. filed (Oct. 5, 2017, No. 17-521).

b. Bilateral Party Choice

[Insert after Note 4 on page 594.]

5. In Hussemann v. Hussemann, 847 N.W.2d 219 (Iowa 2014), two Florida citizens signed a postnuptial agreement two months after they were married in Florida. The agreement contained a choice of law clause making Florida law applicable and a provision under which each of the parties waived a right to an elective share of the other party’s estate. The couple subsequently moved to Iowa, after which one of the spouses died. Notwithstanding the waiver of the elective share provision of the contract, the surviving spouse claimed an elective share of the decedent’s estate. The waiver would be effective under Florida law, but not under Iowa law. Applying § 187 of the Second Restatement, the Iowa Supreme Court held that Florida did not lack a substantial relationship to the parties or the transaction. In addition, the court held that it did not need to decide whether Florida law would apply in the absence of the choice of law clause, because Iowa did not have a materially greater interest in the dispute than Florida. Thus, the waiver was effective. Was it relevant that the parties had entered into the Florida agreement in 1991, but moved to Iowa in 2005, with the death of one of the spouses occurring in 2012? Should the passage of time in which the parties were domiciled in Iowa have enhanced Iowa's interest relative to that of Florida?

* * * * *

CHAPTER 8

VERTICAL CHOICE OF LAW

B. THE ERIE DOCTRINE

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 625.]

See also Schmigel v. Uchal, 800 F.3d 113 (3d Cir. 2015) (Pennsylvania certificate of merit statute does not directly conflict with a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure and is substantive law under Erie that must be applied by a federal court in a diversity action); but cf. In re County of Orange, 784 F.3d 520 (9th Cir. 2015) (no Federal Rule of Civil Procedure governs pre-dispute jury trial waivers; therefore, court applies “relatively unguided” Rules of Decision Act analysis; court finds issue is not outcome determinative and thus is procedural under Erie, which would allow application of federal rule allowing waiver; however, court also finds California’s rule to be substantive because it is a rule of state contract interpretation that favors the state constitutional policy favoring jury trial; thus, it is intimately bound up with the state substantive policy favoring jury trials and the federal “voluntary and knowing” waiver rule is a constitutional minimum whose application is not required when the state rule is more protective of constitutional rights than the federal rule; court thus adopts state law as the federal rule).

[Insert after Problem 8.6 on page 632.]

NOTE

In conjunction with Problems 8.3 – 8.5, concerning certificate of merits statutes, consider Bard Water District v. James Davey & Associates, Inc., 671 F. App’x 506 (9th Cir. 2016), which held the California certificate of merit statute procedural for Erie purposes with no analysis. The court did cite one district court decision holding the statute procedural because it was not outcome determinative and one district court decision stating that the statute was procedural because it does not contain substantive elements of a professional negligence claim, does not limit recovery in any way, and is “somewhat similar” to other procedural statutes. This analysis is completely inadequate, is it not? Don’t unthoughtful decisions like this produce unnecessary confusion about how either a Rules of Decision Act or Rules Enabling Act issue should be analyzed? It is not an excuse, is it, that the opinion is unpublished?

[Insert at the end of Note 5(b) on page 637.]

See generally Chavez v. Dole Food Co., 836 F.3d 205(3d Cir. 2016) (containing an extensive discussion of the meaning and ambiguities of Semtek, including whether a second court can disregard a diversity judgment when the judgment-rendering state’s res judicata law is procedural). See also Daewoo Elecs. Am., Inc. v. Opta Corp., 875 F.3d 1241 (9th Cir. 2017) (effect of federal diversity judgment in another federal diversity action determined by the law of the state where first diversity action determined, here New Jersey; New Jersey preclusion law applicable, but New Jersey mandatory joinder rule requiring related claims and matters arising among related parties to be tried together are distinct from traditional preclusion rules; joinder rules are designed to preserve New Jersey judicial resources in New Jersey courts, and this policy is not “exported” to actions in a different jurisdiction, citing New Jersey authorities), pet. for cert. filed (No. 17-1421, Apr. 9, 2018).

[Insert after Note 8(c) on page 677.]

(d) See also Chieftain Royalty Co. v. Enervest Energy Institutional Fund XIII-A, L.P., 861 F.3d 1182 (10th Cir. 2017) (under Erie state law controls whether attorney fees are available under a particular claim and how the fees should be calculated if available; settlement of a class action brought in Oklahoma).

[Insert at the end of Note 10 on page 678.]

See also Donald L. Doernberg, Horton the Elephant Interprets the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure: How the Federal Courts Sometimes Do and Always Should Understand Them, 42 HOFSTRA L. REV. 799 (2014); Allan Erbsen, Erie’s Four Functions: Reframing Choice of Law in Federal Courts, 89 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 579 (2013); Alan M. Trammel, Toil and Trouble: How the Erie Doctrine Became Structurally Incoherent (and How Congress Can Fix It), 82 FORDHAM L. REV. 3249 (2014); Patrick Woolley, The Role of State Law in Determining the Construction and Validity of Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, 35 REV. LITIG. 207 (2016).

C. HORIZONTAL CHOICE OF LAW UNDER ERIE

[Insert after Note 6 on page 681.]

7. What counts as a state conflict of laws rule under Klaxon that must be applied by federal courts in diversity? Howard v. Ferrellgas Partners, LLP, 748 F.3d 975 (10th Cir. 2014), presented a contracts choice of law problem. Everyone agreed that Kansas conflicts rules applied and also agreed that under those rules the substantive law of the place where the last act necessary to form the contract occurred (the vested rights system rule). However, the court observed that it was not clear where the place of the last act was, and under Kansas approach to conflicts there was a “default presumption” that Kansas law controlled unless a “clear showing” was made that another state’s law should apply. Thus, the court held that it was not error to apply Kansas substantive law given the lack of clarity about the place of the last act. Is this the kind of rule that the federal courts must follow under Klaxon? If the Kansas choice of law rule was clear and applicable, and if the only problem was lack of factual clarity, shouldn’t the court have insisted that the factual matter be clarified instead of using the default presumption? If no one in a diversity case raises a choice of law issue and the state courts would apply their own law by default under the circumstances, could a federal court raise the conflicts issue on its own motion and insist that the parties address it?

[Insert at the end of Note 6(a) on page 697.]

See also Morgantown Machine & Hydraulics of Ohio, Inc. v. Am. Piping Prods., Inc., 887 F.3d 413 (8th Cir.2018) (when action is transferred under § 1404(a) based on a forum selection clause, the transferee court applies the choice-of-law rules of the state in which it sits, citing Atlantic Marine).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 698.]

See also Dobbs v. DePuy Orthopedics, Inc., 842 F.3d 1045 (7th Cir. 2016) (case filed in Ohio district because it was part of multidistrict litigation and later transferred to Northern District of Illinois, where venue would have been proper if there had been no multidistrict litigation treated as filed in Illinois for purposes of Van Dusen-Ferens rule and Illinois conflicts law applied to result in applicability of Illinois law to attorney's claim for contingency fee); In re Dow Corning Corp., 778 F.3d 545 (6th Cir. 2015) (breast plant implant suit filed in North Carolina federal court and transferred to Michigan federal court because manufacturer filed for bankruptcy there; court dismissed action under Michigan statute of limitations; court of appeals holds that there was no reason that Van Dusen-Ferens should not be applied in this situation and that North Carolina choice-of-law rules should have been applied, which would result in North Carolina statute of limitations being applied); Wahl v. Gen. Elec. Co., 786 F.3d 491 (6th Cir. 2015) (plaintiff in Tennessee developed disease allegedly as a result of one of defendant's drugs; the Panel on Multidistrict Litigation consolidated all pretrial litigation involving the drug in the Northern District of Ohio and, instead of plaintiff filing in Tennessee and having the case transferred to Ohio, issue an order allowing the plaintiff to file directly in Ohio; subsequently, the case was transferred back to the Middle District of Tennessee, which applied Tennessee choice-of-law rules and dismissed the action under Tennessee's statute of repose; court of appeals affirmed, holding that the Northern District of Tennessee was not to be considered a transferor district under the circumstances, and that Tennessee choice-of-law rules were the proper rules to apply; those rules pointed to the Tennessee statute of repose as applicable); Steen v. Murray, 770 F.3d 698 (8th Cir. 2014) (suit commenced in U.S. District Court in Iowa transferred for improper venue to District of Nebraska; Nebraska U.S. District Court refused to retransfer and dismissed case under Nebraska statute of limitations; court of appeals affirmed, holding refusal to retransfer because all the wrongful acts in the case had occurred in Nebraska; court also held that Nebraska choice-of-law decisions had to be consulted to determine whether Nebraska would apply its own statute of limitations; the court held that it would; despite the fact that Nebraska follows the Second Restatement, the court referred only to old Nebraska choice-of-law decisions and never referred to original or revised § 142).

D. ASCERTAINING STATE LAW

[Insert at the end of the carryover paragraph on page 702.]

See also Pitzer College v. Indian Harbor Ins. Co., 845 F.3d 993 (9th Cir. 2017) (questions certified to California Supreme Court about (1) whether California’s “common-law notice-prejudice” rule is a fundamental public policy (and whether common law rules other than unconscionability that are not embodied in a statute, regulation, or constitution, may be fundamental public policies for choice-of-law purposes) and (2) if the notice-prejudice rule is a fundamental public policy for purposes of choice-of-law analysis, can a consent provision in a first-party claim insurance policy be interpreted as a notice provision such that the notice-prejudice rule applies?)

[Insert at the end of the text on page 703.]

QUESTION

If a federal district court in a state predicts the content of the law of that state in the absence of any state court authority, and if a state court in another state is considering a choice of law question that requires it to determine whether there is a conflict between its law and the law of the state where the federal authority exists, is the federal authority binding on the state court considering the state choice of law question? See Bridgeview Health Care Ctr., Ltd. v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., 10 N.E.3d 902 (Ill. 2014) (federal court prediction is not state law and cannot, standing alone, create a conflict between forum law and the law of another state, but it may be considered).

E. FEDERAL COMMON LAW AFTER ERIE

[Insert at the end of Note 3(g) on page 708.]

In Jesner v. Arab Bank, PLC, ___ U.S. ___, 138 S. Ct. 1386 (2018) (in the absence of action by Congress, courts should not extend Alien Tort Statute liability to foreign corporations); see also Adhikari v. Kellogg Brown & Root, Inc., 845 F.3d 184 (5th Cir. 2017) (survivors of Nepali national killed in Iraq sued American military contractor under Alien Tort Statute; held: defendant’s conduct at Iraqi base and in U.S. did not fall within statute; contractor’s control over base insufficient and domestic actions did not violate international law); Roger P. Alford, Human Rights After Kiobel: Choice of Law and the Rise of Transnational Tort Litigation, 63 EMORY L.J. 1089 (2014); Anthony Blackburn, Comment, Striking a Balance to Reform the Alien Tort Statute: A Recommendation for Congress, 53 SANTA CLARA L. REV. 1051 (2013); Ursula Tracy Doyle, The Evidence of Things Not Seen: Divining Balancing Factors From Kiobel’s “Touch and Concern” Test, 66 HASTINGS L.J. 443 (2015); Kaki J. Johnson, Casenote, Kiobel v. Royal Dutch Petroleum Co.: The Alien Tort Statute’s Presumption Against Extraterritoriality, 60 LOY. L. REV. 171 (2014); Ernest A. Young, Universal Jurisdiction, the Alien Tort Statute, and Transnational Public-Law Litigation After Kiobel, 64 DUKE L.J. 1023 (2015). For extensive discussion of cases decided in 2017 under the expropriation exception to the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act and related subjects, see Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2017: Thirty-First Annual Survey, 66 AM. J. COMP. L. 1, 10 – 16 (2018).

[Insert at the end 6(e) on page 709.]

See also Pearson v. Sec’y Dep’t of Corr., 775 F.3d 598 (3d Cir. 2015) (state statute of limitations applicable in § 1983 action; state tolling rule would prevent state statute from running if the commencement of the action was stayed by a “statutory prohibition”; court of appeals interprets federal Prison Litigation Reform Act’s exhaustion of remedies requirement applicable to § 1983 actions as a statutory prohibition within the meaning of state tolling statute).

[Insert at the end of Note 6(g) on page 710.]

Omar K. Madhany, Comment, Towards a Unified Theory of “Reverse-Erie,” 162 U. PA. L. REV. 1261 (2014).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 710.]

See also Kevin M. Clermont, Degrees of Deference: Applying vs. Adopting Another Sovereign’s Law, 103 CORNELL L. REV. 243 (2018).

[Insert at the end of Note 9 on page 710.]

See also Mark D. Rosen, Choice-of-Law as Non-Constitutional Federal Law, 99 MINN. L. REV. 1017 (2015).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 9

JUDGMENTS

B. ENFORCEMENT OF STATE JUDGMENTS

2. Basic Policies and Exceptions

[Insert after the last paragraph on page 716.]

For an illustration of the continuing confusion about the source of the rule requiring reference to the law of the judgment-rendering state for the effect of a state judgment, see Graham v. R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., 857 F.3d 1169 (11th Cir. 2017) (in individual action, federal court gives “full faith and credit” to state court’s determination of issues of negligence and strict liability in prior class action); State ex rel. Eric Greitens v. Am. Tobacco Co., 509 S.W.3d 726 (Mo. 2017) (stating that the effect of a state judgment is determined by the law of the judgment-rendering state and citing the RESTATEMENT (SECOND) § 95, but not citing or referring to the implementing statute or the concept of full faith and credit); In re Adoption of Jaelyn B., 883 N.W.2d 22 (Neb. 2016) (Full Faith and Credit Clause requires states to give same effect to adoption decrees of other states as decrees would have in state where decree rendered); Jessee B. v. Tylee H., 883 N.W.2d 1 (Neb. 2016) (same); Burnett v. Maddocks, 881 N.W.2d 185 (Neb. 2016) (same).

a. Basic Policies

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 719.]

See also Gunning v. Doe, 159 A.3d 1227 (Me. 2017) (law of California, where judgment rendered, is conclusive on a collateral issue decided by California court in quashing a subpoena, but Maine law determines whether judgment forecloses claims in Maine or only determines a collateral issue, citing Second Restatement § 95 cmt. c); State ex rel. Eric Greitens v. Am. Tobacco Co., 509 S.W.3d 726 (Mo. 2017) (issue preclusion effect of multistate arbitration award determined under same effect rule by reference to preclusion law of states where decisions rendered, Maryland and Pennsylvania).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 720.]

See Faith Temple v. DiPietro, 130 A.3d 368 (Me. 2015) (Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act does not preclude judgment creditor from bringing common-law action for debt on a judgment).

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 720.]

See also Unleaded Software, Inc. v. TNF Gear, Inc., ___ A.3d ___, 2016 WL 4446549 (Vt. Aug. 19, 2016) (judgment debtor had adequate notice of post-trial proceedings for attorney fees communicated electronically to debtor’s attorney to allow enforcement of Colorado judgment in Vermont).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 725.]

See also Kevin M. Clermont, Limiting the Last-in-Time Rule for Judgments, 36 REV. LITIG. 1 (2017).

b. Exceptions and Potential Exceptions to the Basic Policies

(1) General and Special Public Policy Exceptions

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 745.]

See also EBF Partners, LLC v. Novabella, Inc., 96 N.E.3d 87 (Ind. Ct. App. 2018) (New York judgment based on cognovit note entitled to full faith and credit in Indiana, even though cognovit notes are prohibited in Indiana).

(2) Lack of Personal Jurisdiction

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 751.]

See also Linde Health Care Staffing, Inc. v. Claiborne Cty. Hosp., 198 So. 3d 318 (Miss. 2016) (Missouri judgment based on arbitration award in Missouri; Mississippi Supreme Court held judgment not enforceable because Missouri had no jurisdiction over hospital, which did not appear in arbitration proceeding; hospital did not appear because it was not party to contract that was being arbitrated and did not conduct business in Missouri).

(3) Lack of Subject-Matter Jurisdiction

[Insert after Note 2 on page 756.]

3. In Upper Skagit Indian Tribe v. Lundgren, 584 U.S. ___, 2018 WL 2292445 (2018), the Supreme Court decided a case involving a type of subject-matter jurisdiction issue, sovereign immunity, that intersected with the situs rule. The action was one by property owners against an Indian tribe seeking to quiet title to land that the owners alleged they acquired through adverse possession before the original owner sold the tribe property that was adjacent to the land in question. The land was located in Washington state, and the quiet title action was commenced in Washington state court. The tribe asserted sovereign immunity as a defense to the action. The Supreme Court of Washington held that sovereign immunity does not apply to cases in which a judge exercises in rem jurisdiction to quiet title to land owned by a tribe, but only to cases in which a court exercised in personam jurisdiction over the tribe itself. The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari to review this question and reversed, holding that the in rem nature of the action did not by itself establish that the action was outside the scope of the sovereign immunity. The Court refused to decide the case on the alternative “common law” ground that sovereigns enjoyed no immunity from actions involving immovable property located within the territory of another sovereign, preferring to leave it to the Supreme Court of Washington to decide this issue in the first instance. This provoked a dissent by Justice Thomas, with whom Justice Alito joined, contending that the immovable property exception is clear, well established, and applies to tribal immunity just as it does to all other forms of sovereign immunity. Chief Justice Roberts, with whom Justice Kennedy joined, concurred. The concurrence pointed out that if the immovable property exception turned out to be inapplicable, the plaintiffs were in a difficult situation; the rule (to the concurrence) could not be that the tribe always wins, because that would allow it to seize property with no colorable claim of right. Also, the concurrence found intolerable the Solicitor General’s suggestion that the plaintiffs pick a fight with the tribe by, e.g., cutting timber on the land or building a shed on it, thus provoking the tribe itself to commence a quiet title action.

[Insert at the end of Note 2(d) on page 764.]

See also Ward v. Hahn, 400 P.3d 669 (Kan. Ct. App. 2017) (previously discussed and criticized in Chapter 6A of this supplement as an insert after Note 1(c), page 456 of the casebook).

(4) Fraud

[Insert after Note 5 on page 777.]

6. In V.L. v. E.L., 577 U.S. ___, 136 S. Ct. 1017 (2016), described in Chapter 7 of this supplement in the section on Adoption, the Supreme Court held that Alabama had erred in refusing to give effect to a Georgia adoption judgment on the grounds that the Georgia judgment-rendering court lacked subject-matter jurisdiction under Georgia law. However, it was there pointed out that the parties to the adoption proceeding had established a bogus residence in Georgia in order to invoke the authority of the Georgia court and the proceeding was not adversary in nature. Would circumstances of this sort fall within the fraud exception? If not, should the fraud exception be broadened to include this sort of behavior? If not, should a new exception be created under some other label to include the behavior?

(5) Statutes of Limitations

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 781.]

See also Patrick v. Hess, 212 So. 3d 1039 (Fla. 2017) (Arizona federal judgment registered in Florida but not renewed in Arizona prior to expiration of Arizona five-year statute of limitations, making it unenforceable in Arizona; held that foreign judgment domesticated in Florida under Florida’s version of Uniform Enforcement of Foreign Judgments Act subject to Florida twenty-year statute of limitations applicable to actions on judgments of record of courts of record in Florida, not Arizona law or Florida five-year limitations period for enforcing foreign judgment).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 782.]

See also H & E Equip. Servs., Inc. v. Cassani Elec., Inc., 169 A.3d 1308 (Vt. 2017) (Vermont's statute of limitations on actions on judgments applies not only to original judgments but to renewed judgments.).

(7) Administrative Adjudications

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 798.]

See also Metro. Edison Co. v. Pennsylvania Pub. Util. Comm'n, 767 F.3d 335 (3d Cir. 2015) (judicially reviewed state administrative decision was not “legislative” in character and thus had a preclusive effect under Pennsylvania preclusion rules); Council v. Vill. of Dolton, 764 F.3d 747 (7th Cir. 2014) (judicially reviewed state administrative proceeding had no preclusive effect because governing statute stated agency's decisions would not have preclusive effect).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 799.]

Cf. Toni I Trust v. Wacker, 413 P.3d 1199 (Alaska 2018) (Alaska law providing for exclusive jurisdiction in Alaska over fraudulent transfer actions against trust created under Alaska law cannot oust jurisdiction of other states' courts and federal courts over such actions).

[Insert at the end of Note 8 on page 801.]

See also Demetres v. East West Constr., Inc., 776 F.3d 271 (4th Cir. 2015) (injured worker who collected benefits under North Carolina law brought diversity action in Virginia against subcontractor who allegedly caused injuries in Virginia; held: Virginia law applied under Klaxon doctrine, and required application of law of state of injury, Virginia, to determine whether suit precluded; Virginia's more restrictive law precluded suit, even though North Carolina law permitted it); Mize v. Commonwealth Mining, LLC, 2017 WL 1348516 (W. Va. Apr. 7, 2017) (not reported) (West Virginia had no subject-matter jurisdiction to adjudicate worker's compensation claim because employee, though employed by West Virginia employer, worked in Kentucky where injury and death occurred and claim governed by Kentucky workers' compensation law).

C. ENFORCEMENT OF FEDERAL JUDGMENTS

[Insert after the end of the carryover paragraph on page 813.]

Chavez v. Dole Food Co., 836 F.3d 205 (3d Cir. 2016), is a case containing a complicated procedural history. One issue in the case concerned the effect of a dismissal in a Louisiana federal diversity action on limitations grounds in a subsequent federal action in New Jersey. Importantly, the court of appeals recognized the following point:

We begin by noting that there is an important ambiguity in Semtek itself. Semtek alludes only briefly to the fact that a state might apply two rules simultaneously: first, that a timeliness dismissal precludes re-litigation of the same claims within the state; and second, that a timeliness dismissal does not bar litigation in of the same claims a court outside that state. To frame the problem in the context of the appeal, the fact that timeliness dismissals are claim-preclusive within Louisiana may not necessarily mean that such dismissal extinguish claims in other states with longer limitations periods.

836 F.3d at 226 (emphasis in original). After examining Louisiana law, the court concluded that it would not, in fact, make a judgment of dismissal on limitations grounds claim-preclusive in New Jersey. Note that the problem in this kind of case is finding direct authority on the question of claim preclusion of a limitations dismissal in another state. If a second action were brought in either a Louisiana state or federal court after such a dismissal, the defendant should raise the question of limitations and contend that the question should be considered precluded from re-litigation by the doctrine of issue preclusion. No court in Louisiana will presumably ever have to consider the effect of a limitations dismissal in a suit brought in another state, assuming that there is no certification procedure that would allow the court in the other state to obtain a direct answer. Thus, the judgment-enforcing state will always have to deduce the answer from the judgment-rendering state's general law of claim preclusion. See also Haik v. Salt Lake City Corp., 393 P.3d 285 (Utah 2017) (previous Utah federal judgment based on same claim asserted in this state action was precluded; even though plaintiff did not raise every element in the prior action that is raised in state action, he might have done so; federal law controls the effect of a federal judgment, but Utah's rules of claim preclusion are virtually identical to federal rules of claim preclusion anyway, so it makes no difference which are applied; claim precluded).

D. ENFORCEMENT OF FOREIGN NATION JUDGMENTS

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 816.]

See also John F. Coyle, Rethinking Judgments Reciprocity, 92 N.C. L. REV. 1109 (2014) (concluding that a policy of U.S. judgments reciprocity would not result in foreign states that refuse to enforce U.S. judgments altering their laws to make it easier to enforce U.S. judgments there).

[Insert after Note 2 on page 816.]

3. See also Derr v. Swarek, 766 F.3d 430 (5th Cir. 2014) (foreign nation judgments not included within mandate of Full Faith and Credit Clause; such judgments enforced as a matter of comity; court looks to Mississippi law to determine obligation to enforce foreign nation judgment); D'Amico Dry Ltd. v. Primera Maritime (Hellas) Ltd., 756 F.3d 151 (2d Cir. 2014) (actions to enforce foreign nation judgments fall within federal admiralty jurisdiction, even if not rendered by specialized foreign admiralty court, as long as underlying claim leading to judgment was maritime in nature; United States law, rather than foreign law, determines whether foreign judgment is maritime).

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 818.]

See also Ahmad Hamad Al Gosaibi & Bros. Co. v. Standard Chartered Bank, 98 A.3d 998 (D.C. 2014) (New York judgment that simply recognized a Bahrain judgment is not entitled to full faith and credit in the District of Columbia, because when a state merely recognizes a foreign nation judgment, it lacks the kind of interest that would normally require its domestic judgments to be given full faith and credit in other states; if the rule were otherwise, parties could obtain recognition of a foreign nation judgment in a U.S. state that had the most lax recognition standards and then obtain enforcement of that judgment in any other U.S. state).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 819.]

See also Iraq Middle Market Dev. Found. v. Harmoosh, 848 F.3d 235 (4th Cir. 2017) (as a matter of first impression, court of appeals predicts arbitration clause exception to recognition of foreign judgment under the Maryland Uniform Foreign Money Judgment Recognition Act does not apply when a party has waived its right to arbitrate the dispute by litigating it to a conclusion in a foreign court; however, the fact issue as to whether the judgment debtor waived the right to arbitrate precluded the grant of summary judgment by the district court).

[Insert at the end of Note 4(a) on page 819.]

See also Midbrook Flowerbulbs Holland B.V. v. Holland America Bulb Farms, Inc., 874 F.3d 604 (9th Cir. 2017) (fundamental fairness not offended by Dutch judgment denying judgment debtor access to opponents' records or, at appellate level, appellate court refusing to defer to trial court's determination of credibility of witnesses).

[Insert at the end of Note 4(c) on page 820.]

RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—TREATIES (Preliminary Draft No. 5, Aug. 17, 2016) (Status of Treaties in United States Law); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—JURISDICTION (Preliminary Draft No. 4, Aug. 17, 2016) (General Concept of Jurisdiction; Prescription; Exercise of Prescriptive Jurisdiction by the United States, Adjudication, Jurisdiction to Adjudicate in Criminal Cases, Enforcement, Jurisdiction to Enforce in General, Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Judgments in the United States); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY (Preliminary Draft No. 3, Aug. 17, 2016) (Immunity of States From Jurisdiction; Immunity of Foreign States From Jurisdiction to Adjudicate). Earlier drafts of the Fourth Restatement are, RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—TREATIES (AM. LAW INST., Council Draft No. 1, Dec. 17, 2015); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—JURISDICTION (AM. LAW INST., Council Draft No. 2, Dec. 11, 2015); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—TREATIES (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 3, Nov. 3, 2014) (containing Chapter 2 on the status of treaties in United States law and the black letter of Preliminary Draft No. 3); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—JURISDICTION (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 2, Nov. 5, 2014) (containing Chapter 5 on immunity of states from jurisdiction, Subchapter A on immunity of foreign states from jurisdiction to adjudicate and the black letter of Preliminary Draft No. 2); RESTATEMENT (FOURTH) OF THE FOREIGN RELATIONS LAW OF THE UNITED STATES—JURISDICTION (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No. 2, Oct. 20, 2014) (containing Chapter 1 on the limits on U.S. prescriptive jurisdiction, Chapter 2 on the effect of foreign exercises of prescriptive jurisdiction, the black letter of Preliminary Draft No. 2, and other relevant black letter text).

[Insert at the end of Note 13(b) on page 825.]

See also de Fontbrune v. Wofsy, 838 F.3d 992 (9th Cir. 2016) (French award for copyright infringement was not a penal judgment; French court awarded civil remedies and an injunction under the relevant code provisions, but did not make an award under the court’s power to impose criminal penalties for copyright violations).

[Insert at the end of Note 14(i) on page 827.]

John B. Bellinger III & R. Reeves Anderson, Tort Tourism: The Case for a Federal Law on Foreign Judgment Recognition, 54 VA. J. INT’L L. 501 (2014).

[Insert at the end of Note 16(b) on page 828.]

See also Comm’n’s Import Export S.A. v. Republic of the Congo, 757 F.3d 321 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (Foreign Arbitral Awards Conventions Act’s (New York Convention) three-year period to confirm a foreign arbitral award did not preempt District of Columbia’s Uniform Foreign-Country Money Judgments Recognition Act’s longer limitations period for enforcing a foreign court judgment enforcing the award).

[Insert at the end of Note 16(e) on page 829.]

See also Thai-Lao Lignite (Thailand) Co. v. Government of Lao People’s Democratic Republic, 864 F.3d 172 (2d Cir. 2017) (Malaysian tribunal sets aside Malaysian arbitral award against Laos; U.S. District Court in New York renders judgment enforcing award and then, on Rule 60(b) motion, sets aside judgment and is affirmed by Second Circuit Court of Appeals, which held district court had not abused its discretion because of strong presumption in favor of primary jurisdiction's (Malaysia's) ruling); Getma Int'l v. Republic of Guinea, 862 F.3d 45 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (arbitral award against Guinea set aside by Common Court of Justice and Arbitration for certain African countries; D.C. Circuit affirms D.C. U.S. District Court's refusal to enforce award because the annulment of the award did not violate basic notions of morality and justice); Belize Bank Ltd. v. Gov't of Belize, 852 F.3d 1107 (D.C. Cir. 2017) (arbitral award rendered by London Court of International Arbitration against Belize; court of appeals holds that enforcement of award would not violate the United States' most basic notions of morality and justice); Iraq Middle Market Dev. Found. v. Harmoosh, 848 F.3d 235 (4th Cir. 2017) (judgment debtor resists enforcement of Iraqi judgment in Maryland on grounds that contract required parties to arbitrate; court holds debtor waived right to arbitrate under both Iraqi and Maryland law); W. Laurence Craig, Some Trends and Developments in the Laws and Practice of International Commercial Arbitration, 50 TEX. INT'L L.J. 699 (2016).

[Insert at the end of Note 16(f) on page 829.]

The latest draft of the project on international commercial arbitration is, RESTATEMENT OF THE U.S. LAW OF INTERNATIONAL COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION (AM. LAW INST., Preliminary Draft No.10, Oct. 12, 2017).

* * * * *

CHAPTER 10

PERSONAL JURISDICTION

A. SERVICE OF PROCESS AND NOTICE

2. Long-Arm Process

[Insert at the end of the carryover paragraph on page 833.]

See also Water Splash, Inc. v. Menon, 581 U.S. ___, 137 S. Ct. 1504 (2017) (Hague Service Convention does not prohibit service by mail, but does not specifically authorize such service; mail service is permissible as long as it is authorized by the forum state and the receiving state has not objected to mail service).

3. Due Process Requirement of Adequate Notice

[Insert at the end of Note on page 836.]

See also Barot v. Embassy of the Republic of Zambia, 785 F.3d 26 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (dismissal of complaint for failure to properly effectuate service under Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act was an abuse of discretion under circumstances in which it appeared service could be made properly by plaintiff proceeding in forma pauperis); Freedom Watch, Inc. v. Org. of the Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), 766 F.3d 74 (D.C. Cir. 2014) (service on OPEC by delivery to OPEC's headquarters in Austria and by sending a copy of the documents by Austrian mail to OPEC's headquarters did not satisfy Rule 4(f)).

B. FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT RESTRICTIONS ON STATE-COURT JURISDICTION

1. Traditional Territorial Restrictions

a. Pennoyer v. Neff

[Insert after the carryover of the quote at 838.]

For a recent defense of Pennoyer against numerous criticisms that it was wrong when decided, see Stephen E. Sachs, Pennoyer Was Right, 95 TEX. L. REV. 1249 (2017).

b. Evolution of the Territorial Rules

[Insert at the end of the first paragraph in this subsection.]

See also Jacob Kreutzer, Incorporating Personal Jurisdiction, 119 PENN ST. L. REV. 211 (2014) (describing Pennoyer as having failed to identify how personal jurisdiction doctrine should change to emphasize the individual right quality of the doctrine after being incorporated into the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment).

2. Development of Modern Restrictions on State-Court Jurisdiction

[Insert after the citation to the Fraleigh decision in the carryover paragraph on page 847.]

See also Nordness v. Faucheux, 170 So. 3d 454 (Miss. 2015) (action by ex-wife against ex-husband's paramour for alienation of affections, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, invasion of privacy, and punitive damages arising from ex-husband's extramarital affair with defendant in several non-forum states, but not in the forum; court held that Mississippi's long-arm provision providing for jurisdiction over nonresident who commits a tort in whole or part in Mississippi was broad enough to cover the case, because affair broke up marriage in Mississippi; however, the minimum contacts test was violated because the defendant did nothing in Mississippi and did not know the ex-husband was from Mississippi, thus eliminating the purposeful contacts necessary to sustain an exercise of specific jurisdiction (see text below)); Pruczinski v. Ashby, 374 P.3d 102 (Wash. 2016) (Idaho state trooper pursued suspected drunk driver from Idaho into Washington; during stop of driver, trooper allegedly committed several torts; held: trooper committed tortious acts within state within Washington long-arm statute, but to satisfy due process, jurisdiction must be based on intentional conduct of defendant; here, both parties were citizens of Idaho and defendant did not know he was in Washington at the time of the traffic stop; nevertheless, connections with both Washington and Idaho are sufficient for either state to assert jurisdiction; case remanded for trial court to determine whether to decline jurisdiction on grounds of comity).

[Insert at the end of carryover paragraph on page 847.]

See also SCVNGR, Inc. v. PUNCHH, Inc., 85 N.E.3d 50 (Mass. 2017) (trial court must determine whether long-arm statute applies before considering due process); Sproul v. Rob & Charlies, Inc., 304 P.3d 18 (N.M. 2012) (personal jurisdiction issue involves two-step inquiry; first, is New Mexico long-arm statute applicable and, second, is due process satisfied; because New Mexico statute extends as far as due process permits, inquiry "collapses" into the latter inquiry!).

a. Status of Traditional Territorial Rules After International Shoe

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 855.]

See also Pac. W. Bank v. Eighth Judicial Court of Nevada, 383 P.3d 252 (Nev. 2016) (funds contained in debtor's out-of-state accounts were a debt that was garnishable).

[Insert after Note three on page 855.]

4. In Hazout v. Tsang Mun Ting, 134 A.3d 274 (Del. 2016), a Delaware statute provided that nonresident officer who accepted and held office in the corporation consented to suit in Delaware in cases in which the corporation sued (or someone sued on its behalf) or was sued in the state and the officer was a necessary or proper party and in suits in which the officer was sued for violation of a duty in the capacity as officer. The Delaware Supreme Court held that in a suit against the corporation and an officer, among others, for unjust enrichment, fraud, and fraudulent transfer based on actions in Canada, this statute properly subjected the officer to suit in Delaware and was consistent with the officer's "constitutional expectations of due process" because by accepting a position as a director and officer of a Delaware corporation the officer purposefully availed himself of certain duties and protections of Delaware law. The court observed that under the circumstances of the case, the officer could not "fairly say" that he did not foresee that he would be subject to suit in Delaware based on his out-of-state conduct. What part in the foreseeability of suit did the Delaware statute itself play and could the officer have been subject to suit under a more general statute purporting to subject him to jurisdiction in any suit in which it would not be inconsistent with the U.S. Constitution to do so?

b. General and Specific Jurisdiction

(1) General Jurisdiction

[Insert at the end of Note 9 on page 881.]

See also Genuine Parts Co. v. Cepec, 137 A.3d 123 (Del. 2016) (compliance with corporate registration statute allowing service of process on foreign corporation doing business within state does not constitute consent to general jurisdiction over corporation within the state); Segregated Account of Ambac Assurance Corp. v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 898 N.W.2d 70 (Wisc. 2017) (statute requiring registration and appointment of agent to receive service did not result in consent to general jurisdiction); Nicholas D'Angelo, Note, Emerging from Daimler's Shadow: Registration Statutes as a Means to General Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporations, 91 ST. JOHN'S L. REV. 211 (2017).

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 908.]

Brown v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 814 F.3d 619 (2d Cir. 2016) (action by personal representative of deceased Air Force mechanic to recover for asbestos exposure, none of which occurred in the forum state; held: foreign corporation's leasing of space in four locations in the forum and employment of between 30 and 70 workers in the state may have been systematic and continuous activity, but fell far short of the high level of activity necessary to make the corporation essentially at home in the state; registration to do business under forum state statute did not constitute consent to suit in the state); Hinrichs v. Gen. Motors of Canada, Ltd., 222 So. 3d 1114 (Ala. 2016) (plaintiff was a German citizen in Alabama for flight training; while riding as a passenger in a G.M. vehicle manufactured in Canada sold to an independent entity, Motors Liquidation Corporation (MLC), in Canada, and imported to the U.S. by MLC and sold in Pennsylvania, he was involved in an accident with a drunk driver; he commenced a products liability action in Alabama; the Alabama Supreme Court held that neither general nor specific jurisdiction was appropriate in Alabama; the Alabama Supreme Court held that general jurisdiction was inappropriate because G.M. Canada's contacts with Alabama were not such, under the Goodyear-Daimler standard as to make it "at home" there; the court also held specific jurisdiction to be inappropriate, relying especially on the McIntyre (casebook page 927) and Walden (casebook page 944) cases, the court emphasized that it "has not found any case in which a trial court has exercised specific jurisdiction over a foreign manufacturer arising from its sale of an allegedly defective vehicle in a foreign jurisdiction to a separate entity in the foreign jurisdiction unless the vehicle was ultimately sold in the forum state" and "no caselaw that upholds specific jurisdiction where the stream of commerce for the product does not end in the forum state"); Magill v. Ford Motor Co., 379 P.3d 1033 (Colo. 2016) (action against Ford by a resident of Colorado based on an accident in Colorado; although Ford did business in Colorado and had offices there, the court concluded that it was not "at home" in Colorado under the Goodyear-Daimler standard; the court remanded the case for the trial court to consider whether specific jurisdiction was appropriate); First Cmty. Bank, N.A. v. First Tennessee Bank, N.A., 489 S.W.3d 369 (Tenn. 2015) (under Supreme Court's decisions in Goodyear and Daimler, it is not sufficient to sustain an exercise of general jurisdiction that defendants do business in state; none of defendants did more than one per cent of their fifty-state business in Tennessee and only defendant to have office in state had employees in state that constituted no more than 0.3% of its employees there; therefore, contacts do not establish that the defendants are essentially at home in Tennessee).

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 908.]

See also Am. Fidelity Assurance Co. v. Bank of N.Y. Mellon, 810 F.3d 1234 (10th Cir. 2016) (after Goodyear but before Daimler, action commenced against nonresident defendant; defendant did not object to assertion of general jurisdiction over it until after Daimler decided; defendant argued that defense should not be considered waived because Daimler changed the law on general jurisdiction and made the objection available whereas it had not been prior to the decision; court disagreed, holding that Daimler simply reaffirmed the Goodyear standard, so that objection was available to defendant under latter case); Judy M. Cornett & Michael H. Hoffheimer, Good-Bye Significant Contacts: General Personal Jurisdiction After Daimler AG v. Bauman, 76 OHIO ST. L.J. 101 (2015) (arguing that Daimler is a significant departure from settled practice); Linda S. Mullenix, Personal Jurisdiction Stops Here: Cabining the Extraterritorial Reach of American Courts, 45 U. TOL. L. REV. 705 (2014) (commenting on Daimler among other recent Supreme Court decisions).

[Add the following citation to the insert for Note 4 on page 908 in the current supplement:]

Ariel Winawer, Comment, Too Far from Home: Why Daimler’s “At Home” Standard Does Not Apply to Personal Jurisdiction Challenges in Anti-Terrorism Act Cases, 66 EMORY L.J. 161 (2016).

[Insert the following new text after Problem 10.8 on page 909.]

In BSNF Railway Co. v. Tyrrell, 581 U.S. ___, 137 S. Ct. 1549 (2017), plaintiffs commenced FELA actions in Montana state court against BSNF, seeking recovery for injuries inflicted outside Montana. BSNF was incorporated in Delaware and had its principal place of business in Texas. BSNF did business in Montana, having about 6% of its total track mileage there, employing less than 5% of its workers there, generating less than 10% of its revenue there, and having only one of its 24 automotive facilities there (4%). BSNF moved to dismiss the action, arguing that it was not “at home” there as required by Daimler. Its motion was granted in one of the two cases before the trial court and denied in the other. The Montana Supreme Court consolidated the two cases and held that the Montana courts could exercise general personal jurisdiction over both cases.

The court first relied on 42 U.S.C. § 56, which provides that an action may be brought in a district court of the United States, in the district of the residence of the defendant, or in which the cause of action arose, or in which the defendant shall be doing business at the time of commencing such action. The jurisdiction of the courts of the United States under this chapter shall be concurrent with that of the courts of the several states.

The court concluded that this section authorizes state courts to exercise personal jurisdiction over railroads doing business in the state. In addition, the court concluded that by providing that personal jurisdiction may be exercised over all persons “found” within the state, Montana law also authorized general personal jurisdiction over the railroad because of its many miles of track and large number of employees within the state.

The Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed. The court first held that § 56 dealt only with venue and subject-matter jurisdiction, not personal jurisdiction. Turning to the exercise of personal jurisdiction under Montana law, the Court observed that because neither plaintiff “alleges any injury from work in or related to Montana, only the propriety of general jurisdiction is at issue.” The Court then interpreted Goodyear and Daimler to make Montana’s assertion of personal jurisdiction over the two actions unconstitutional under the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. The Court first observed that it did not matter that Montana was exercising jurisdiction over federal (FELA) claims under state law, because the “due process constraint described in Daimler . . . applies to all state-court assertions of general jurisdiction over nonresident defendants” Second, the Court concluded that BSNF’s contacts with Montana were inadequate to satisfy the systematic and continuous contacts test. Despite the “magnitude” of the corporation’s activities in Montana, the Court stated that the due process inquiry does not focus entirely on the magnitude of activities within the state. Rather, it calls for appraisal of the corporation's activities in their entirety, because a corporation that operates in many places can scarcely be deemed "at home" in all of them. Finally, the plaintiffs contended that BSNF had consented to jurisdiction in Montana, but because the Montana Supreme Court had not considered that question, the Supreme Court also refused to consider it.

Justice Sotomayor dissented from that part of the Court's opinion dealing with general jurisdiction asserted under Montana law. Essentially, she continued her objection to the Court's approach to general jurisdiction in Daimler. However, she also objected to the Court's failure to remand the case to the Montana Supreme Court for reevaluation under proper legal standards, interpreting that failure to obliterate the Court's observation in Daimler that there might be "exceptional cases" in which general jurisdiction would be appropriate in a forum that was neither the corporate defendant's place of incorporation or principal place of business.

NOTES AND QUESTIONS

1. Note that the interpretation of § 56 as not being a federal long-arm statute avoided some interesting questions. Chapter 10B.2.c examines the Fifth Amendment limits on federal assertions of long-arm jurisdiction. Does Congress have the constitutional power to confer long-arm jurisdiction on state courts when they are hearing claims under federal law? If so, is the assertion of jurisdiction by those courts under a federal long-arm statute governed by Fifth or Fourteenth Amendment standards, assuming that there is any longer a difference?

2. Note also the Court's refusal to confront the plaintiff's argument that BSNF had consented to jurisdiction in Montana. Given the Court's approach in Goodyear, Daimler, and BSNF, is it conceivable that the Court would hold the Fourteenth Amendment satisfied by a state statute exacting consent to general jurisdiction over a corporation based on the fact that it did business in the state?

3. Does the Court's approach mean that specific jurisdiction will be the only available basis for asserting jurisdiction over a corporate defendant not incorporated and not having its principal place of business in the state?

4. See Priscilla Heinz, When Is It Necessary for Corporations to be Essentially at Home?: An Exploration of Exceptional Cases, 51 U. RICH. L. REV. 1179 (2017); Wm. Grayson Lambert, The Necessary Narrowing of General Personal Jurisdiction, 100 MARQUETTE L. REV. 375 (2016); Cassandra Burke Robertson & Charles W. "Rocky" Rhodes, The Business of Personal Jurisdiction, 67 CASE W. RES. L. REV. 775 (2017).

(2) Specific Jurisdiction

[Insert at the end of Note 4(a) on page 918.]

See Acorda Therapeutics, Inc. v. Mylan Pharm., Inc., 817 F.3d 755 (Fed. Cir. 2016) (action in U.S. District Court for the District of Delaware for injunction to prevent defendant from marketing generic drugs in Delaware and elsewhere; court of appeals holds that district court could validly exercise specific jurisdiction over action; the defendant's action in applying to the FDA for permission to engage in future activities in Delaware and elsewhere was "suit related" and was tied in purpose and planned effect to the future marketing of drugs in Delaware and elsewhere; concurring Judge O'Malley agrees, but believes court should have reached the issue of general jurisdiction, which he considered easier than specific jurisdiction under Delaware's registration statute).

[Insert after Note 4(b) on page 919.]

(c) The Supreme Court this term had an opportunity to clarify the "related to" concept in specific jurisdiction. The result indicates that the Court may have effectively eliminated the concept as a test for whether an assertion of jurisdiction is general or specific. In Bristol-Meyers Squibb Co. v. Superior Court of California, 582 U.S. ___, 137 S. Ct. 1773 (2017), plaintiffs included some California residents but mostly nonresidents of the state. Their claims asserted injuries caused by a drug manufactured by defendant. The nonresident plaintiffs did not assert that they had obtained the drug from the defendant in California, had been injured by the drug there, or been treated there. The defendant was incorporated in Delaware and headquartered in New York, with extensive activities in New York and New Jersey. The defendant also had extensive activities in California. The California Superior Court found that general jurisdiction existed over the nonresident plaintiffs' claims against the defendant in California based on its activities there. The California Court of Appeal found that general jurisdiction was improper under the Daimler test examined above in the casebook, but found that specific jurisdiction was proper. The California Supreme Court affirmed the specific jurisdiction conclusion, emphasizing in part that the nonresidents' claims were similar to the California residents' claims and because the defendant engaged in other activities in the state.

The U.S. Supreme Court granted certiorari and reversed. The Court stated that it was insufficient that the claims of the nonresidents were similar or identical to the claims of the California residents. Rather, it was necessary that there be a connection between the forum and the specific claims at issue. Importantly, the Court distinguished the case of Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc., examined in Note 2 at page 925 of the casebook. The court stated that in Keeton, the false statements of fact made by the defendant harmed both the nonresident subject of the falsehood within the state and the readers of the statement who were residents of the state. That distinguished the nonresident plaintiffs' claims in Squibb, because their claims involved no harm in California and no harm to California residents.

In Squibb, the Court's decision was 8 to 1, with only Justice Sotomayor dissenting. One point made by Justice Sotomayor was that the nonresident plaintiffs' claims "related to" the defendant's forum conduct because it was "materially identical" to the actions of the company in California.

Another point Justice Sotomayor made was that the defendant had not challenged that its contacts with California were purposeful, or that the assertion of jurisdiction over it was unreasonable.

[Insert after Note 5 on page 919.]

6. After the Squibb decision, is there any room left to conclude that when the defendant conducts identical conduct in and outside the forum state, but the harm to the plaintiff occurs wholly outside the forum, the plaintiff can successfully assert specific jurisdiction over the defendant in the forum?

7. After Squibb, what is left of the suggestion in Burger King that the reasonableness test can enhance the case for specific jurisdiction in an otherwise marginal case? Is it sufficient to preserve that suggestion that in Squibb, the court said that specific jurisdiction was absent altogether under the test that it applied, making it unnecessary to inquire into purposeful contacts and reasonableness?

8. Is the Court taking its eye off the fundamentals of due process in the recent general and specific jurisdiction cases in order to pursue a policy of limiting forum shopping? That is, the purpose of the due process clause in its procedural operation is to assure the defendant an adequate opportunity to be heard in defense before its property (damages) can be taken from it. Beyond that fundamental policy, the clause arguably should not limit the power of a plaintiff to bring suit anywhere. If the defendant's activities give rise to a foreseeable risk of suit in the state that the defendant should and can protect itself against with insurance, higher prices, etc., why should the Court conclude that it is being deprived of due process because the plaintiff is engaging in forum shopping?

9. Justice Sotomayor also suggested in her opinion that the Court was still carrying the torch for federalism by importing territorial restrictions into the due process inquiry as it did in World Wide Volkswagen (discussed in Note 2 on page 917 of the casebook), McIntyre (reprinted on page 927 of the casebook), and, of course, Pennoyer (discussed at page 836 of the casebook). This is a fair implication of the Court's overall approach to personal jurisdiction limits under the Due Process Clause. If this is so, is the Court's approach justified or should it consider a general reformulation of its due process jurisprudence?

10. See also Hinrichs v. General Motors of Canada, Ltd., 222 So.3d 1114 (Ala. 2016) (no general or specific jurisdiction over Canadian manufacturer of General Motors automobile that caused injury in Alabama; general jurisdiction not proper because GM Canada's contacts not so systematic and continuous in Alabama as to make it at home there; specific jurisdiction not proper because vehicle sold in Pennsylvania and not in Alabama, with the result that there is no suit-related conduct by GM Canada sufficient to confer jurisdiction even under a stream of commerce theory); State ex rel. Norfolk So. Ry. Co. v. Dolan, 512 S.W.3d 41 (Mo. 2017) (Missouri did not have specific or general jurisdiction over FELA action arising out of events in another state; no general jurisdiction because Daimler standard not met by Norfolk's activities in Missouri; no specific jurisdiction just because Norfolk conducted the same kind of activities in Missouri as in the state where the claim arose; compliance with statute that required appointment by Norfolk of agent to receive process does not provide an independent basis for general jurisdiction; no need to determine whether state could constitutionally require corporation to submit to general jurisdiction as a condition of doing business in state); Figueroa v. BNSF Ry. Co., 390 P.3d 1019 (Or. 2017) (Oregon legislature did not intend for statute requiring foreign corporation to appoint agent to receive service of process as condition of doing business in Oregon to result in implied consent to general jurisdiction).

[Insert at the end of Note 3 on page 926.]

Alan M. Trammel & Derek E. Bambauer, Personal Jurisdiction and the “Interwebs,” 100 CORNELL L. REV. 1129 (2015).

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 942.]

See also Péter D. Szigeti, The Illusion of Territorial Jurisdiction, 52 TEX. INT’L L.J. 369 (2017); George Rutherglen, Personal Jurisdiction and Political Authority, 32 J.L. & POL. 1 (2016).

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 942.]

See Align Corp. v. Boustred, ___ P.3d ___, 2017 WL 7208133 (Colo. 2017), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___ (2018) (stream of commerce theory still valid after McIntyre; both Asahi and McIntyre were cases in which pluralities adopted the stream of commerce plus test, but the concurrences did not; therefore, in stream of commerce cases, World-Wide Volkswagen continues to govern).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 943.]

See also Cody Jacobs, A Fork in the Stream: The Unjustified Failure of the Concurrence in J. McIntyre Machinery Ltd. v. Nicastro to Clarify the Stream of Commerce Doctrine, 12 DEPAUL BUS. & COM. L.J. 171 (2014); Eric Shepard, The Battle for the Soul of International Shoe: Why the Author of International Shoe Would Condemn the Nicastro Plurality for Hijacking His Legacy of Judicial Restraint, 32 QUINNIPIAC L. REV. 353 (2014).

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 951.]

See also Brook v. McCormley, 873 F.3d 549 (7th Cir. 2017) (no specific jurisdiction in Illinois based on the residence of the plaintiff there where all other contacts were with Arizona); Catholic Diocese of Greenbay, Inc. v. John Doe, 349 P.3d 518 (Nev. 2015) (assertion of specific jurisdiction over Wisconsin diocese in Nevada; although diocese engaged in certain monitoring activities over priest after transfer to Nevada, it did not assign him daily tasks that he could not refuse consistent with his employment in Nevada; doctrine of incardination, which results in a certain loyalty to the ordaining diocese (here Wisconsin) did not establish agency relationship between priest and diocese; purposeful contacts therefore not present); First Cmty. Bank, N.A. v. First Tennessee Bank, N.A., 489 S.W.3d 369 (Tenn. 2015) (rating agencies ratings of investments that were purchased in Tennessee did not establish purposeful contacts with Tennessee for purposes of specific jurisdiction); FutureSelect Portfolio Mgmt., Inc. v. Tremont Grp. Holdings, Inc., 331 P.3d 29 (Wash. 2014) (sustaining an exercise of jurisdiction over the defendant based on its doing of business with the plaintiffs through an agent in Washington).

[Insert at the end of Note 2 on page 951.]

Cf. Old Republic Ins. Co. v. Cont'l Motors, Inc., 877 F.3d 895 (10th Cir. 2017) (suit based on crash, in Idaho, of airplane owned by Colorado resident on flight from Colorado; engine manufacturer did not purposefully direct its activities at Colorado residents so as to subject it to specific jurisdiction there; Colorado -aircraft servicer's enrollment in program that allowed unlimited access to engine manufacturer's online service manuals did not establish the kind of continuing relationship with Colorado residents that would subject manufacturer to personal jurisdiction in Colorado).

[Insert at the end of Note 3(b) on page 952.]

See also Morrill v. Scott Fin. Corp., 873 F.3d 1136 (9th Cir. 2017) (action in Arizona for abuse of process and wrongful institution of civil proceedings; court, relying on Walden, holds no specific jurisdiction in Arizona over defendants because, although they had taken some actions in Arizona, all actions were in pursuance of litigation in Nevada); Adam Balinski, Wonky Walden: The Dizzying New Personal Jurisdiction Rule, 2016 B.Y.U. L. REV. 683 (2016); Katherine Florey, What Personal Jurisdiction Doctrine Does—And What It Should Do, 43 FLA. ST. U. L. REV. 1201 (2016); Simona Grossi, Personal Jurisdiction: A Doctrinal Labyrinth with No Exit, 47 AKRON L. REV. 617 (2014); Peter L. Markowitz & Lindsay C. Nash, Constitutional Venue, 66 FLA. L. REV. 1153 (2014).

c. Amenability to Process in Federal Court

[Insert at the end of the textual paragraph prior to the Note on page 955.]

See also Patrick J. Borchers, Extending Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 4(k)(2): A Way to (Partially) Clean Up the Personal Jurisdiction Mess, 67 AM. U. L. REV. 413 (2017); Jeff Lingwall & Chris Wray, Fraudulent Aggregation: The Effect of Daimler and Walden on Mass Litigation, 69 FLA. L. REV. 599 (2017); Gwynne L. Skinner, Expanding General Personal Jurisdiction Over Transnational Corporations for Federal Causes of Action, 121 PENN ST. L. REV. 617 (2017); Tobias Barrington Wolff, Choice of Law and Jurisdictional Policy in the Federal Courts, 165 U. PA. L. REV. 1847 (2017).

C. GROUNDS FOR DECLINING JURISDICTION

1. Forum-Selection Clauses

[Insert after Note 4(c) on page 965.]

(d) See also Stone & Webster, Inc. v. Georgia Power Co., 779 F.3d 614 (D.C. Cir. 2015) (permissive forum selection clause did not prohibit evaluation of filing in another forum according to standards governing which parallel federal declaratory judgment action should be allowed to proceed); Nickerson v. Network Solutions, LLC, 339 P.3d 526 (Colo. 2014) (on motion to set aside a default judgment, forum selection clause does not deprive court of jurisdiction to enter judgment); Energy Claims Ltd. v. Catalyst Inv. Grp. Ltd., 325 P.3d 70 (Utah 2014) (forum selection clause in contract was entitled to same deference in forum non conveniens analysis (see below) as would be given a plaintiff who filed suit in its home jurisdiction; forum selection clause; when party alleges forum selection clause obtained by fraud, it must plead the circumstances constituting fraud with particularity and the trial court is authorized to conduct a hearing in its discretion on the allegations of fraud before deciding whether to enforce clause). Cf. Roberts v. TriQuint Semiconductor, Inc., 364 P.3d 328 (Ore. 2015) (Delaware Corporation's forum selection by law did not violate directors fiduciary duty and was not unreasonable or unfair under either Delaware or Oregon law).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 966.]

See also Collins v. Mary Kay, Inc., 874 F.3d 176 (3d Cir. 2017) (diversity class action in New Jersey; contract contained choice-of-law and forum-selection clauses pointing to Texas courts and Texas law; New Jersey follows Second Restatement of Conflicts providing generally for enforcement of choice-of-law clauses; therefore, Texas law provides for interpretation of forum-selection clause; under Atlantic Marine, 571 U.S. 49, forum selection clause alters forum non conveniens analysis by eliminating any weight for plaintiff's choice of forum and private interests, and all the court considers is the availability of an alternative forum and the relevant public interest factors; here plaintiff did not satisfy heavy burden required under Atlantic Marine of demonstrating that the latter factors required disregard of forum selection clause); San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. Gilbert, 329 P.3d 1264 (Mont. 2014) (when contract contains both choice-of-law clause and forum selection clause, court first determines validity of choice-of-law clause; choice-of-law clause selecting California law is valid; forum selection clause selecting California forum is valid and mandatory). For an extensive discussion of which law governs the interpretation and enforcement of a forum selection clause, see Symeon C. Symeonides, Choice of Law in the American Courts in 2016: Thirtieth Annual Survey, 65 AM. J. COMP. L. 1 (2017).

2. Forum Non Conveniens

[Insert at the end of Note 1 on page 970.]

See Espinoza v. Evergreen Helicopters, Inc., 337 P.3d 169 (Ore. 2016) (case of first impression; doctrine of forum non conveniens is part of common law of Oregon); West Virginia ex rel. Khoury v. Cuomo, 783 S.E.2d 849 (W.Va. 2016) (West Virginia forum non conveniens statute).

[Insert at the end of Note 4(b) on page 973.]

See also Aranda v. Phillip Morris USA, Inc., ___ A.3d ___, 2018 WL 1415215 (Del. 2018) (in determining forum non conveniens question, alternative forum is part of the inquiry, but is not a threshold inquiry).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 974.]

See also Hefferan v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc., 828 F.3d 488 (6th Cir. 2016) (lesser presumption in favor of plaintiff's choice of forum when plaintiff lives abroad); Halo Creative & Design Ltd. v. Comptoir Des Indes, Inc., 816 F.3d 1366 (Fed Cir. 2016) (action in which both plaintiff and defendant were businesses based in Hong Kong and Canada, but claim was for infringement of American patents, trademarks, and copyrights in the United States; court held that Canada was not an adequate alternative forum because it had not been demonstrated that Canada would provide remedies for intellectual property claims occurring abroad); Archangel Diamond Corp. Liquidating Trust v. OAO Lukoil, 812 F.3d 799 (10th Cir. 2016) (two requirements for forum non conveniens dismissal are an adequate alternative forum and a choice-of-law analysis confirming that foreign law is applicable, because if issue is controlled by American law dismissal is not proper; here dismissal was proper in a case in which domestic law governed part of case and foreign country law governed part of case); Garcia v. AA Roofing Co., 125 A.3d 1111 (D.C. 2015) (district court erred in dismissing on forum non conveniens grounds; question is not whether the District of Columbia is the ideal forum in which to bring a suit, but whether it is a seriously inconvenient forum); In re Oceanografia, S.A. de C.V., 494 S.W.3d 728 (Tex. 2016) (suit arising out of sinking of Mexican ship in Mexican waters, with all plaintiffs and defendants being Mexican citizens except for two defendants that were businesses not based in Texas; court held that Mexico was an adequate alternative forum); American Electric Power Co. v. Nibert, 784 S.E.2d 713 (W. Va. 2016) (refusal of lower court to dismiss on grounds of forum non conveniens in favor of alternative forum in Ohio was not an abuse of discretion under West Virginia codification of forum non conveniens doctrine).

[Insert at the end of Note 7 on page 974.]

See also Simona Grossi, Forum Non Conveniens as a Jurisdictional Doctrine, 75 U. PITT. L. REV. 1 (2013).

[Add the following citation to the Insert for Note 7 on page 974:]

Pamela K. Bookman, The Unsung Virtues of Global Forum Shopping, 92 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 579 (2016).

5. Local Actions

[Insert at the end of Note 2(b) on page 990.]

See also Ralph v. Dep't of Nat'l Res., 343 P.3d 342 (Wash. 2014) (statute embodying local action rule reinterpreted to be venue statute rather than subject matter jurisdiction limitation; therefore, when an action is commenced in a county in which the land is located, proper result is not dismissal for lack of jurisdiction, but a change of venue to a county where the land is located).

6. Comity?

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 993.]

Pruczunski v. Ashby, 374 P.3d 102 (Wash. 2016) (Idaho trooper pursued Idaho motorist suspected of driving drunk from Idaho into Washington; Washington long-arm statute and due process satisfied by assertion of personal jurisdiction in Washington in tort action against trooper; however, case remanded for determination by trial court whether to decline jurisdiction in favor of Idaho on basis of comity).

[Add the following citation to the Insert for Note 5 on page 993:]

See also In re Vitamin C Antitrust Litig., 837 F.3d 175 (2d Cir. 2016) (international comity doctrine required abstention in antitrust case in which true conflict existed between Chinese and United States' laws and factors in addition to the true conflict also pointed toward abstention).

D. INJUNCTIONS AGAINST EXTRASTATE ACTIONS

[Insert at the end of Note 4 on page 1002.]

See also Chavez v. Dole Food Co., 836 F.3d 205, 225 (3d Cir. 2016) (in vast majority of cases, a court exercising its discretion under the first-filed rule should stay or transfer a second-filed suit rather than dismiss it; district court abused its discretion by dismissing the action with prejudice under the first filed rule and also erred in denying a motion to transfer the action to another district court in New Jersey); Hapag-Lloyd Aktiengesellschaft v. U.S. Oil Trading LLC, 814 F.3d 146 (2d Cir. 2016) (interpleader action in which district court enjoined parties from proceedings in other actions including a foreign action; held, although 28 U.S.C. § 2361, which authorizes injunctions in statutory interpleader actions under 28 U.S.C. § 1335 does not have extraterritorial operation, federal courts have inherent power to enjoin foreign proceedings; remanded for district court to apply proper statute for determining when foreign antisuit injunction should be granted); In re Amerijet Int'l, Inc., 785

F.3d 967 (5th Cir. 2015) (in removed action, district court did not err in enjoining Florida action because Texas action was clearly the first filed; only federal authorities relied on). Cf. Volkman v. Hanover Invs., Inc., 126 A.3d 308 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2015) (forum should have dismissed parallel declaratory judgment action).

[Insert at the end of Note 5 on page 1002.]

See also Maslowski v. Prospect Funding Partners LLC, 890 N.W.2d 756 (Minn. 2017) (action to enjoin New York proceeding and obtain declaratory judgment that agreement with litigation company was unenforceable; forum selection clause selecting New York as forum under agreement, in conjunction with choice-of-law clause selecting New York substantive law as governing agreement, were unenforceable as an attempt to avoid Minnesota's public policy against champerty agreements; New York action concerned similar issues and would be disposed of by Minnesota action; district court did not abuse its discretion in not deferring to New York proceeding under first filed rule, because courts of Minnesota and New York do not have concurrent jurisdiction; and comity and equity did not require deference to New York proceeding).

[Insert at the end of Note 6 on page 1003.]

See also Samantha Koeninger & Richard Bales, When a U.S. Domestic Court Can Enjoin a Foreign Court Proceeding, 22 CARDOZO J. INT'L & COMP. L. 473 (2014).

* * * * *